Because many of the states ratified and signed into law emergency powers for governors to use. It's quite broad and would be a tough battle to win in the courts.

That is why we are being told not to leave our houses! To suppress the virus!!

Now when we stop suppressing, obviously the virus will come back.

The Imperial report is quite pessimistic about that scenario because it doesn't attempt to model strategies taken in Asia

As pointed out - that figure (fig3) does show a rebound when interventions turn off, but the plan is to keep interventions for (or to "pump the breaks") until a solution comes in place

1/ Morning folks. Wondering why @CDCgov is using such aggressive rules for death counts? Look - there's considerable evidence #COVID infections have peaked in the US. Even the POTUS comments last night warning about this being the "toughest week" suggest as much (deaths lag)...

4/ 20,000 deaths, with perhaps that many more coming over the next month (deaths lag). That's terrible! Yeah. It is. But [illegible] is estimating 24,000-63,000 flu deaths this year.

So why is the virus "under control" in New York? Not masks (hi California!). Not lockdowns (plenty of people out these days). Not test trace isolate (lol, 1/2 or more of people won't even answer calls).

Here's a hint. The most likely answer rhymes with "shmerd dimmunity."

Scott Gottlieb, MD @ScottGottliebMD
New York State on 7/4: More testing. Fewer cases uncovered. When the virus is under control, testing doesn't uncover more cases. It's a tool for keeping the epidemic at bay.

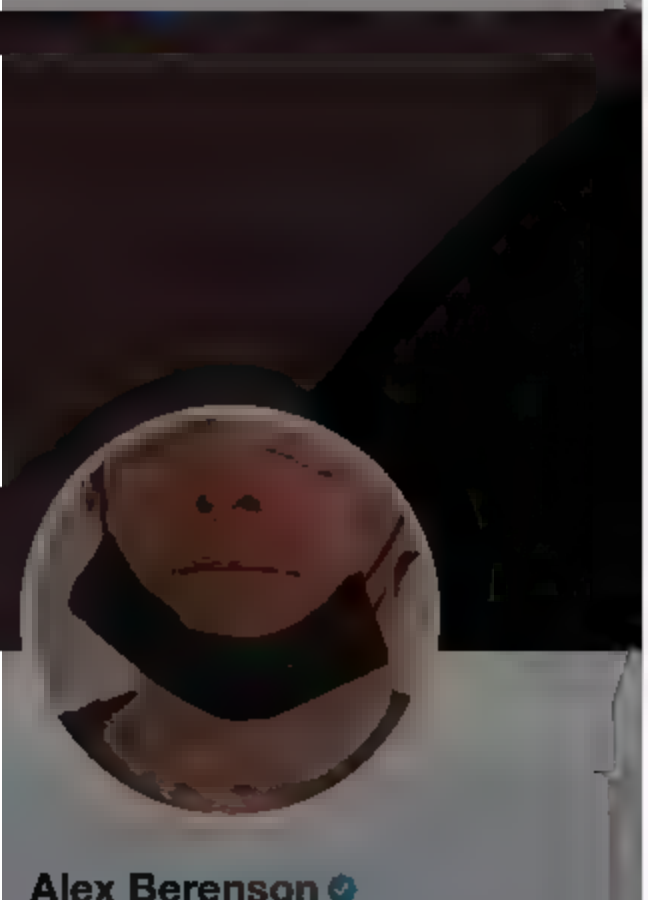
1/ #COVID-19 is devastating hospitals and employees nationally. But not for the reason you think. They are empty - prepared for a surge that has not come - and burning cash. An executive reports his group's stronger hospitals have "months" of cash; the weaker ones have "weeks."



about 15 other CFOs

- Seeing decline in volume about 40% and similar revenue cut – his low was about 50% cut in volume but only about 2-5% COVID
- Outpatient basically is a zero
- Only exception is hot spots which have a lot of volume but much lower revenue and higher cost because of PPE
- A reasonable way to think about it is down 40-60% at the peak
- No one expects to recapture everything they lost
- Staff
  - Not flexing yet
  - Post spike in likely have to make some adjustments
  - Could take 40% off of earnings and need to reduce staffing by 10% but not close to enough
- Longer term impact

3/ And while acknowledging the economic crisis, Vance more or less throws up his hands, saying that it would have happened anyway. But the difference between voluntary social distancing and what we have now is the distance between recession and depression. That's no exaggeration.

4  23  157

Alex Berenson
@AlexBerenson

4/ Vance broadly ignores all the non-economic effects of the lockdown too - closing schools, even though kids don't appear to be at risk - and the general fraying of society that has already begun, social shaming, neighbors calling out the police on neighbors...

5/ And the move to continue to extend the lockdowns even in places that have seen no epidemic. The longer this continues, the harder it is to fix the economy and society. We have difficult choices to make, but the media panic and focus on outlier cases does not help.

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 8 Aib

6/ Finally - the choices we DO make cannot have as our primary goal zero new infections or deaths. That is an unrealistic standard and we don't apply it to influenza or TB or other diseases with high overall mortality. Our focus should be avoiding surges and health-system strain.

1/ I'm going to try to explain this once more for all the blue-checks insisting that they KNOW lockdowns work.

The models failed. In real time. Even in NY state, the April 1 iteration of @IHME_UW model estimated four times the hospitalizations last week as were taking place.

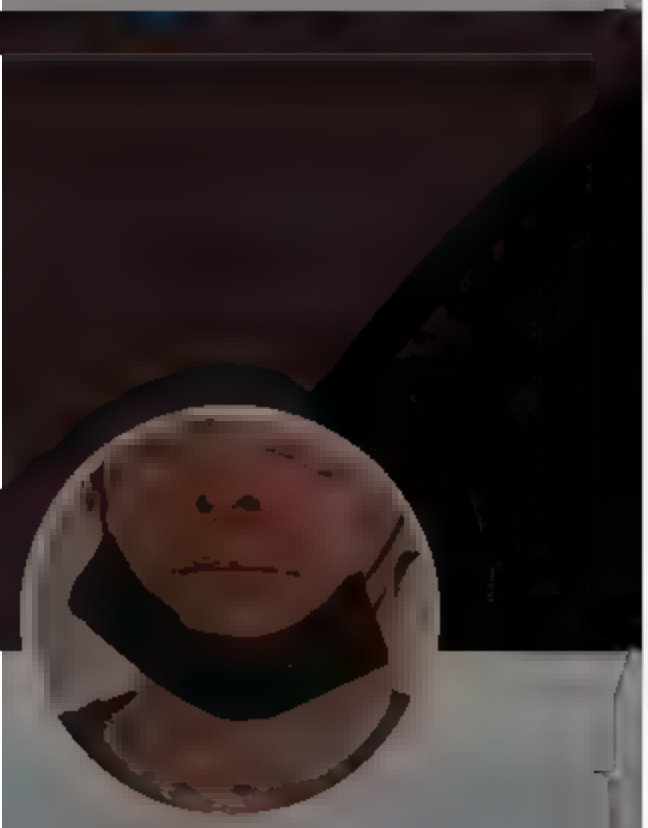
2/ But it's crucial to understand WHY they failed.



There is a TIME LAG between infection, symptoms, hospitalization, ICU care, and death. 5 days on average from infection to symptoms, several more days to hospitalization, 2-3 more to ICU care. These are averages, but correct.

9 152 566

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10 apr.

3/ The models assumed (not unreasonably) that in places like New York, lockdowns had come TOO LATE. Between March 17 and March 25, hospitalizations in NY rose 7X. The models assumed that because of the time lag, the rise would go on UNTIL THE EFFECTS OF THE LOCKDOWN KICKED IN...

COVID-19 has killed more Americans in 6 weeks than the flu does in a year.

And that is WITH all the stark measures we've taken.

1/ So on Monday, @laurawags of @vice asked me for an interview, and I agreed, under certain very specifuc conditions. Let's see what happened next. Note: Laura and I have never spoken by phone - this email thread is the entirety of our communication:

Laura Wagner

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has biffed coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

Alex Berenson

I'm very short on time. If you want to ask questions over email I will try to answer them, but only on the condition you don't do it Chatter-style and annotate or second-guess me after I have answered (in other words, it would have to be the equivalent of a live on-air interview). You ask, I answer, that's the end of it

From a physician in Indiana who has signed and reviewed death certificates for almost 50 years: “doctors are using death by COVID-19 as a convenient diagnosis...”

Cause of death fallacy

Lee A. Fischer, M.D.

I'm a family physician who graduated med school in '72 and practiced family med in West Palm Beach for 31 years. During that time I signed hundreds of death certificates. For the last 25+ years I've reviewed and testified in hundreds of medical negligence cases. In the last 5 years 90% involved nursing home negligence. Obviously many of these nursing patients died so I review a lot of death certificates. I can tell you that more often than not the cause of death listed bares no resemblance to the actual cause. Many doctors still list "cardiorespiratory arrest" as

AT&T 11:03 AM 68%

Primary

I believe that doctors are using death by COVID-19 as a convenient diagnosis when they don't really know what caused their death. Unless someone has tested + for the virus and had symptoms and died there is no way to attribute their death to COVID-19. As you point out the # of deaths due to the "pandemic" is highly inflated and in my opinion for political gain. Keep spreading the news and your right on point analysis.

1/ This email came from a German reader. To summarize: on April 15 the official German public health/disease control institute published a paper showing that moderate social distancing reduced #SARS_CoV2 spread but the hard lockdown was useless.

2/ Of note, the paper assumes a reproduction cycle of 4 days. Thus the epidemic can spread fast - and will be hugely sensitive to changes in R (how many people 1 infected person infects in turn). At an R of 3.1 with a cycle of 4 days, 1 infection will become 10,000 in a month!

3/ So this is yet more evidence #SARSCoV2 has been present for longer and spread wider in the US than previously understood (because the replication cycle is so short and the transmission rate so high, even two weeks could make a 5-15x difference in the number of infections).

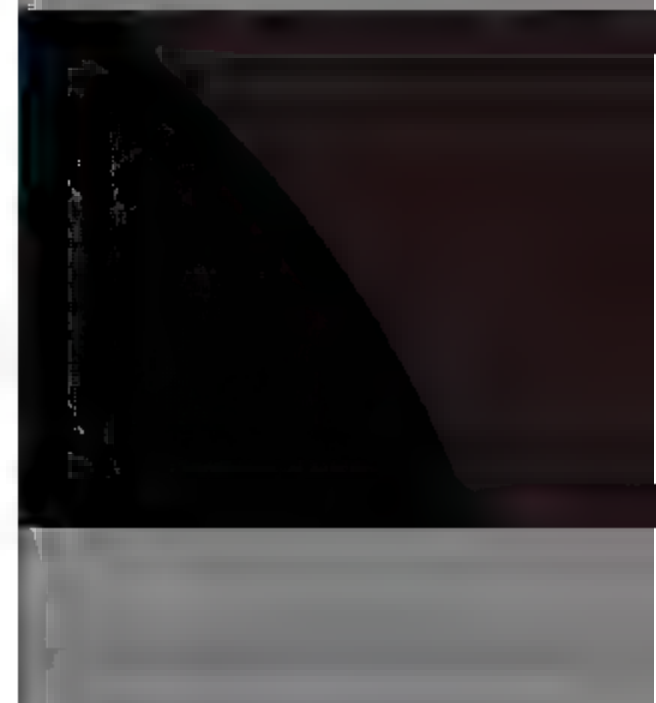
Viruses be virusing: From the papers I've read this seems like a sadly accurate summary of the literature. Would be very interested to hear infectious disease specialistsand virologists chime in...

27 minutes ago Details

Remember- hand washing, respiratory etiquette, masks AND even surface disinfection are not significantly effective to reduce transmission of the influenza virus OR any viruses that happen to be spread via respiratory secretions and also transmitted more easily such as the 'rona.



Those measures will probably help reduce your chance of getting a stomach virus though!

The only thing that may help is not standing uncomfortably close to someone who has a virus transmitted by respiratory means whilst they are singing or talking for more than 15 minutes... forever.

A nurse can generally take care of one to two ventilated patients as they require close monitoring. If on vent, generally will require extra IV lines or arterial lines to allow monitoring of oxygen and extra meds (more pharmacy support), respiratory therapists, lab to run tests

EXACTLY.
That is why we are being told not to leave our houses! To suppress the virus!!

Now when we stop suppressing, obviously the virus will come back.

The Imperial report is quite pessimistic about that scenario because it doesn't attempt to model strategies taken in Asia

3/ And while acknowledging the economic crisis, Vance more or less throws up his hands, saying that it would have happened anyway. But the difference between voluntary social distancing and what we have now is the distance between recession and depression. That's no exaggeration.

5/ And the move to continue to extend the lockdowns even in places that have seen no epidemic. The longer this continues, the harder it is to fix the economy and society. We have difficult choices to make, but the media panic and focus on outlier cases does not help.

6/ Finally - the choices we DO make cannot have as our primary goal zero new infections or deaths. That is an unrealistic standard and we don't apply it to influenza or TB or other diseases with high overall mortality. Our focus should be avoiding surges and health-system strain.

Great news. @IHME_UW updated its model again - two days after the last revision. Total deaths fell from 81K to under 61K hospitalizations fell from 140K to 90K (1/3 last week's projection) m. The peak is now projected in 3 days. Can we PLEASE talk about reopening the nation?

1/ I try to analyze dispassionately. But I will admit I am ANGRY about the way we have largely ignored the massive harm lockdowns and school closings have on kids. Remember: anyone under 30 is at almost ZERO risk here (there are always outliers; planes crash but flying is safe).

2/ Children, more than anyone else, suffer immediately from the lockdowns. They're denied school. They're denied normal socializing with their friends. In many places they have even - bizarrely - been denied the chance to play outside.

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10 de abr.

3/ The stress even on healthy families is incredible. And for children in troubled families, the cost is far higher; for those kids, schools may well be the only chance they have to be seen every day by an adult who is not high or abusive.

16 195 1,1 mil

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10 de abr.

4/ Of all the choices we've made, sacrificing the mental health of children at zero risk from this illness is the LEAST acceptable. But so many in the media are young and don't have children, or perhaps are married couples with one child (an equation that makes care easier).

1/ I'm going to try to explain this once more for all the blue-checks insisting that they KNOW lockdowns work.

The models failed. In real time. Even in NY state, the April 1 iteration of @IHME_UW model estimated four times the hospitalizations last week as were taking place.

There is a TIME LAG between infection, symptoms, hospitalization, ICU care, and death. 5 days on average from infection to symptoms, several more days to hospitalization, 2-3 more to ICU care. These are averages, but correct.

Hard to know how representative pro teams are, but their PCR (active virus) test rates are coming in very high right now - more evidence that the real rates of infection dwarf the reported rates (which in turn suggests the hysteria around "spikes" is nearly meaningless).

> Percentagewise, the NBA numbers are much lower than the rate of positive tests in many hotspot areas, including the average in Florida. With 351 players tested through June 29, the league had 25 positives for a 7.1 percent rate. Among 884 team staff tested between June 23 and June 29, the rate was minuscule — the 10 positives equate to a mere 1.1 percent positive rate.

2/ The number comes from a March 19 SCCM paper:

"[One estimate is that 1/2 of] ICU admissions (960,000) would require ventilatory support. Such projections are gross estimates."

More importantly: this is everyone who may need ventilation OVER THE COURSE OF THE EPIDEMIC...

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 26

3/ In fact, the paper states explicitly "that U.S. hospitals could absorb a maximum of 26,000 to 56,000 additional ventilators at the peak of a national pandemic, as safe use of ventilators requires trained personnel."

4 196 512

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 26

4/ In other words, whatever happens with COVID, if we built a million new ventilators, 950,000 would be furniture.

Added bonus: the paper reports the US already has far more critical care beds per-capita than other nations: 35 per 100,000, compared to 12 in Italy, 7 in the UK...

An incredible chart: three countries had earlier and more effective “social distancing” than any others: France, Italy, and Spain - the three countries with the WORST epidemics. Wonder why. (Maybe because most transmission is intrafamilial and nosocomial? Just spitballing here.)

2/ In fact, the report says explicitly that "the initial duration of measures... will be several months."

n therefore population-wide social distancing combined with home isolation of cases and school and university closure.

To avoid a rebound in transmission, these policies will need to be maintained until large stocks of vaccine are available to immunise the population – which could be 18 months or more. Adaptive hospital surveillance-based triggers for switching on and off population-wide social distancing and school closure offer greater robustness to uncertainty than fixed duration interventions and can be adapted for regional use (e.g. at the state level in the US). Given local epidemics are not perfectly synchronised, local policies are also more efficient and can achieve comparable levels of suppression to national policies while being in force for a slightly smaller proportion of the time. However, we estimate that for a national GB policy, social distancing would need to be in force for at least 2/3 of the time (for $R_0 = 2.4$, see Table 4) until a vaccine was available.

However, there are very large uncertainties around the transmission of this virus, the likely effectiveness of different policies and the extent to which the population spontaneously adopts risk reducing behaviours. This means it is difficult to be definitive about the likely initial duration of measures which will be required, except that it will be several months. Future decisions on when and for how long to relax policies will need to be informed by ongoing surveillance.

The measures used to achieve suppression might also evolve over time. As case numbers fall, it becomes more feasible to adopt intensive testing, contact tracing and quarantine measures akin to the strategies being employed in South Korea today. Technology – such as mobile phone apps that

As Neil explicitly stated in the testimony you're all up in arms about - those "new" numbers require the social distancing measures kept in place until enough testing is available to follow South Korea.

Great news. @IHME_UW updated its model again - two days after the last revision. Total deaths fell from 81K to under 61K hospitalizations fell from 140K to 90K (1/3 last week's projection) m. The peak is now projected in 3 days. Can we PLEASE talk about reopening the nation?

1/ #COVID-19 is devastating hospitals and employees nationally. But not for the reason you think. They are empty - prepared for a surge that has not come - and burning cash. An executive reports his group's stronger hospitals have "months" of cash; the weaker ones have "weeks."

about 15 other CFOs

- Seeing decline in volume about 40% and similar revenue cut – his low was about 50% cut in volume but only about 2-5% COVID
- Outpatient basically is a zero
- Only exception is hot spots which have a lot of volume but much lower revenue and higher cost because of PPE
- A reasonable way to think about it is down 40-60% at the peak
- No one expects to recapture everything they lost
- Staff
  - Not flexing yet
  - Post spike in likely have to make some adjustments
  - Could take 40% off of earnings and need to reduce staffing by 10% but not close to enough
- Longer term impact

Time to start using more straightforward language and calling out people who don't tell the truth, like @pbump. The original model explicitly accounted for the effect of lockdowns. It was wrong in real-time, embarrassingly so; that's why it's been updated. (It's still wrong.)

Philip Bump @pbump
A notable shift downward in projected deaths from coronavirus is already being spun as "experts were wrong!!" Instead of "hey, the thing experts said would drive down deaths might be driving down deaths."

1/ I'm going to try to explain this once more for all the blue-checks insisting that they KNOW lockdowns work.

The models failed. In real time. Even in NY state, the April 1 iteration of @IHME_UW model estimated four times the hospitalizations last week as were taking place.

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10 اپریل

2/ But it's crucial to understand WHY they failed.

There is a TIME LAG between infection, symptoms, hospitalization, ICU care, and death. 5 days on average from infection to symptoms, several more days to hospitalization, 2-3 more to ICU care. These are averages, but correct.

9  152  566

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10 اپریل

3/ The models assumed (not unreasonably) that in places like New York, lockdowns had come TOO LATE. Between March 17 and March 25, hospitalizations in NY rose 7X. The models assumed that because of the time lag, the rise would go on UNTIL THE EFFECTS OF THE LOCKDOWN KICKED IN...

I am going to follow up with data directly from Sweden but it appears deaths are plunging - not a shock, given the ICU trends. Recall, Sweden has no lockdown. Deaths per-capita have been far lower than the U.K., Italy, France, or Spain, just higher than other Nordic countries.

COVID-19 has killed more Americans in 6 weeks than the flu does in a year.

And that is WITH all the stark measures we've taken.

"Flu +" seems like an understatement, no?

From a physician in Indiana who has signed and reviewed death certificates for almost 50 years: "doctors are using death by COVID-19 as a convenient diagnosis..."

Cause of death fallacy

Lee A. Fischer, M.D.

I'm a family physician who graduated med school in '72 and practiced family med in West Palm Beach for 31 years. During that time I signed hundreds of death certificates. For the last 25+ years I've reviewed and testified in hundreds of medical negligence cases. In the last 5 years 90% involved nursing home negligence. Obviously many of these nursing patients died so I review a lot of death certificates. I can tell you that more often than not the cause of death listed bares no resemblance to the actual cause. Many doctors still list "cardiorespiratory arrest" as

mail.google.com

Primary

I believe that doctors are using death by COVID-19 as a convenient diagnosis when they don't really know what caused their death. Unless someone has tested + for the virus and had symptoms and died there is no way to attribute their death to COVID-19. As you point out the # of deaths due to the "pandemic" is highly inflated and in my opinion for political gain. Keep spreading the news and your right on point analysis.

2/ Of note, the paper assumes a reproduction cycle of 4 days. Thus the epidemic can spread fast - and will be hugely sensitive to changes in R (how many people 1 infected person infects in turn). At an R of 3.1 with a cycle of 4 days, 1 infection will become 10,000 in a month!

Why can't the US media and (blue-state) policymakers keep two ideas in mind at once? #SARSCoV2 can be dangerous, especially to the elderly - but to respond by denying kids an education (and generally wrecking the economy and society with lockdowns of dubious value) is a mistake.

Remember - it is only April 21. In most states, schools have been out for only about a month. Closing through the end of the school year means another TWO months of lost schooling, and a five-plus-month break overall...

And there's a lot of evidence that many kids regress during the normal summer break - and that poor kids especially suffer, because their parent(s) may not have the time or resources to help them.

2/ And the emerging data out of Florida, Southern California, etc suggest that this virus - like most respiratory viruses - doesn't do well when the weather warms and UV rays get stronger. Great news! Right? Right? Well... we're at under 9,000 deaths now.

3/ Suppose the president is right. And this is the "toughest week." And we average 1,500 deaths a day. That gets us to almost 20,000 deaths by April 12. By then the trend should clearly be down, I don't think it will be arguable...

4/ 20,000 deaths, with perhaps that many more coming over the next month (deaths lag). That's terrible! Yeah. It is. But [illegible] is estimating 24,000-63,000 flu deaths this year.

A nurse can generally take care of one to two ventilated patients as they require close monitoring. If on vent, generally will require extra IV lines or arterial lines to allow monitoring of oxygen and extra meds (more pharmacy support), respiratory therapists, lab to run tests

As pointed out - that figure (fig3) does show a rebound when interventions turn off, but the plan is to keep interventions for (or to "pump the breaks") until a solution comes in place

2/ But that implies that the rest of the US will have about 65,000 - 4x+ NYS. Right now, the rest of the country is at about 1.4x NYS - and the epidemic does not seem to be accelerating elsewhere...

3/ And we have seen for the last 3 months that, for whatever reason, regional (or national) disparities don't lessen much once they're in place. If the rest of the US remains at that 1.4x level, deaths ex NY would be about 23,000, and the US total would be a bit under 40,000.

If we tanked the economy, drove tens of millions out of work, wiped out 401ks of retirees, interrupted the education of our children, & put $2trillion on a credit card for less deaths than the seasonal flu, you might see some civil unrest in this country like we've never seen.

1/ #COVID-19 is devastating hospitals and employees nationally. But not for the reason you think. They are empty - prepared for a surge that has not come - and burning cash. An executive reports his group's stronger hospitals have "months" of cash; the weaker ones have "weeks."

about 15 other CFOs

- Seeing decline in volume about 40% and similar revenue cut – his low was about 50% cut in volume but only about 2-5% COVID
- Outpatient basically is a zero
- Only exception is hot spots which have a lot of volume but much lower revenue and higher cost because of PPE
- A reasonable way to think about it is down 40-60% at the peak
- No one expects to recapture everything they lost
- Staff
  - Not flexing yet
  - Post spike in likely have to make some adjustments
  - Could take 40% off of earnings and need to reduce staffing by 10% but not close to enough
- Longer term impact

Time to start using more straightforward language and calling out people who don't tell the truth, like @pbump. The original model explicitly accounted for the effect of lockdowns. It was wrong in real-time, embarrassingly so; that's why it's been updated. (It's still wrong.)

Philip Bump @pbump
A notable shift downward in projected deaths from coronavirus is already being spun as "experts were wrong!!" Instead of "hey, the thing experts said would drive down deaths might be driving down deaths."

1/ I try to analyze dispassionately. But I will admit I am ANGRY about the way we have largely ignored the massive harm lockdowns and school closings have on kids. Remember: anyone under 30 is at almost ZERO risk here (there are always outliers; planes crash but flying is safe).

2/ Children, more than anyone else, suffer immediately from the lockdowns. They're denied school. They're denied normal socializing with their friends. In many places they have even - bizarrely - been denied the chance to play outside.

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10 de abr.

3/ The stress even on healthy families is incredible. And for children in troubled families, the cost is far higher; for those kids, schools may well be the only chance they have to be seen every day by an adult who is not high or abusive.

4/ Of all the choices we've made, sacrificing the mental health of children at zero risk from this illness is the LEAST acceptable. But so many in the media are young and don't have children, or perhaps are married couples with one child (an equation that makes care easier).

1/ So on Monday, @laurawags of @vice asked me for an interview, and I agreed, under certain very specifuc conditions. Let's see what happened next. Note: Laura and I have never spoken by phone - this email thread is the entirety of our communication:

Laura Wagner

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has biffed coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

Alex Berenson

I'm very short on time. If you want to ask questions over email I will try to answer them, but only on the condition you don't do it Chatbot-style and annotate or second-guess me after I have answered (in other words, it would have to be the equivalent of a live on-air interview). You ask, I answer, that's the end of it

From a physician in Indiana who has signed and reviewed death certificates for almost 50 years: "doctors are using death by COVID-19 as a convenient diagnosis..."

Cause of death fallacy

Lee A. Fischer, M.D.

I'm a family physician who graduated med school in '72 and practiced family med in West Palm Beach for 31 years. During that time I signed hundreds of death certificates. For the last 25+ years I've reviewed and testified in hundreds of medical negligence cases. In the last 5 years 90% involved nursing home negligence. Obviously many of these nursing patients died so I review a lot of death certificates. I can tell you that more often than not the cause of death listed bares no resemblance to the actual cause. Many doctors still list "cardiorespiratory arrest" as

I believe that doctors are using death by COVID-19 as a convenient diagnosis when they don't really know what caused their death. Unless someone has tested + for the virus and had symptoms and died there is no way to attribute their death to COVID-19. As you point out the # of deaths due to the "pandemic" is highly inflated and in my opinion for political gain. Keep spreading the news and your right on point analysis.

3/ Children with autism have had their routines disrupted and are having a difficult time adapting.

My name is and I am an Intervention Specialist (teach special ed). My own son is on the Autism spectrum, on the high functioning end. He has been struggling since this whole lockdown started. He is not a social butterfly, but he does enjoy time with school friends. He needs structure and predictability and that is clearly not happening now. I try to keep a certain structure to our days, but it's hard because I am working, my husband is working and his older brother has lots of schoolwork he also needs help with. The other thing Colin is struggling with is not understanding why he has to do schoolwork when he's not in school.. there have been many meltdowns and I expect many more before all is said and done.

I've never like social media for children because I think it keeps them from face to face interactions which are critical for their growing minds. However, due to the closure, they

I have a senior daughter in high school and a son who has autism and is in his first year of tech school. Both are having issues with extremely high anxiety and now I'm seeing depression.

Their social and emotional needs are taking a serious hit. My son's special needs friends are not receiving needed therapies and are having regressions due to the isolation as well

My daughter's senior year is a wash, but she's still expected to take an AP exam next month. The digital learning is a joke - the platforms crash every day.

They both are working still - my son at a grocery store and daughter at a fast food restaurant. I'm grateful for that - it's their only normalcy.

2/ In fact, the report says explicitly that "the initial duration of measures... will be several months."

16 March 2020 — Imperial College COVID-19 Response Team

...is therefore population-wide social distancing combined with home isolation of cases and school and university closure.

To avoid a rebound in transmission, these policies will need to be maintained until large stocks of vaccine are available to immunise the population – which could be 18 months or more. Adaptive hospital surveillance-based triggers for switching on and off population-wide social distancing and school closure offer greater robustness to uncertainty than fixed duration interventions and can be adapted for regional use (e.g. at the state level in the US). Given local epidemics are not perfectly synchronised, local policies are also more efficient and can achieve comparable levels of suppression to national policies while being in force for a slightly smaller proportion of the time. However, we estimate that for a national GB policy, social distancing would need to be in force for at least 2/3 of the time (for $R_0 = 2.4$, see Table 4) until a vaccine was available.

However, there are very large uncertainties around the transmission of this virus, the likely effectiveness of different policies and the extent to which the population spontaneously adopts risk reducing behaviours. This means it is difficult to be definitive about the likely initial duration of measures which will be required, except that it will be several months. Future decisions on when and for how long to relax policies will need to be informed by ongoing surveillance.

The measures used to achieve suppression might also evolve over time. As case numbers fall, it becomes more feasible to adopt intensive testing, contact tracing and quarantine measures akin to the strategies being employed in South Korea today. Technology – such as mobile phone apps that

It's right there, at the bottom of your screen grab.  Here, let me show you.

As Neil explicitly stated in the testimony you're all up in arms about - those "new" numbers require the social distancing measures kept in place until enough testing is available to follow South Korea.

> The measures used to achieve suppression might also evolve over time. As case numbers fall, it becomes more feasible to adopt intensive testing, contact tracing and quarantine measures akin to the strategies being employed in South Korea today. Technology – such as mobile phone apps that track an individual's interactions with other people in society – might allow such a policy to be more

2/ And the emerging data out of Florida, Southern California, etc suggest that this virus - like most respiratory viruses - doesn't do well when the weather warms and UV rays get stronger. Great news! Right? Right? Well... we're at under 9,000 deaths now.

3/ Suppose the president is right. And this is the "toughest week." And we average 1,500 deaths a day. That gets us to almost 20,000 deaths by April 12. By then the trend should clearly be down, I don't think it will be arguable...

4/ 20,000 deaths, with perhaps that many more coming over the next month (deaths lag). That's terrible! Yeah. It is. But [illegible] is estimating 24,000-63,000 flu deaths this year.

Wow. So this is a non-random sample and only one data point, but at a testing site in Chicago 30-50% of people are testing positive for CV antibodies (meaning they have already had the virus). WE NEED WIDESPREAD ANTIBODY TESTING.

The @stanford antibody testing is out - it estimates ~3% of people in Santa Clara County (CA) have been infected and recovered, 50-plus times the estimate of confirmed active cases. More evidence #SARSCoV2 is far more widespread and thus less dangerous than expected.

without seroprevalence data to inform epidemic parameters. We measured the seroprevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in Santa Clara County. Methods On 4/3-4/4, 2,50 adult county residents for antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 using a lateral flow immunoassay. Participants were recruited using Facebook ads targeting a representative sample of the county by demographic and geographic characteristics. We report the prevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in a sample of 3,330 people, adjusting for zip code, sex, and race/ethnicity. We also adjust for test performance characteristics using 3 different estimates: i) the test manufacturer's data, ii) a sample of 37 positives and 30 negatives controls tested at Stanford, and iii) a pooled weighted of both. Results The unadjusted prevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in Santa Clara [illegible] The population prevalence of SARS-CoV-2 antibodies in Santa Clara County implies that the infection is much more widespread than indicated by the number of confirmed cases. Population prevalence estimates can now be used to calibrate epidemic and mortality projections.

2/ Unfortunately, though the model updated just now, its projections remain inaccurate for actual use TODAY: for example, it predicts New York state on April 5 will need 24,000 beds and 6,000 ICU beds, about 1/3 more than the actual usage today. Not sure what to say about this...

First "social distancing" and school closure started March 18, restaurants, etc., closed March 25.

So we peaked BEFORE the significant closures even began?

1/ #COVID-19 is devastating hospitals and employees nationally. But not for the reason you think. They are empty - prepared for a surge that has not come - and burning cash. An executive reports his group's stronger hospitals have "months" of cash; the weaker ones have "weeks."

about 15 other CFOs

- Seeing decline in volume about 40% and similar revenue cut – his low was about 50% cut in volume but only about 2-5% COVID
- Outpatient basically is a zero
- Only exception is hot spots which have a lot of volume but much lower revenue and higher cost because of PPE
- A reasonable way to think about it is down 40-60% at the peak
- No one expects to recapture everything they lost
- Staff
  - Not flexing yet
  - Post spike in likely have to make some adjustments
  - Could take 40% off of earnings and need to reduce staffing by 10% but not close to enough
- Longer term impact

COVID-19 has killed more Americans in 6 weeks than the flu does in a year.

And that is WITH all the stark measures we've taken.

"Flu +" seems like an understatement, no?

From a physician in Indiana who has signed and reviewed death certificates for almost 50 years: "doctors are using death by COVID-19 as a convenient diagnosis..."

Cause of death fallacy

Lee A. Fischer, M.D.

I'm a family physician who graduated med school in '72 and practiced family med in West Palm Beach for 31 years. During that time I signed hundreds of death certificates. For the last 25+ years I've reviewed and testified in hundreds of medical negligence cases. In the last 5 years 90% involved nursing home negligence. Obviously many of these nursing patients died so I review a lot of death certificates. I can tell you that more often than not the cause of death listed bares no resemblance to the actual cause. Many doctors still list "cardiorespiratory arrest" as

He is not a social butterfly, but he does enjoy time with school friends.  He needs structure and predictability and that is clearly not happening now.  I try to keep a certain structure to our days, but it's hard because I am working, my husband is working and his older brother has lots of schoolwork he also needs help with.  The other thing Colin is struggling with is not understanding why he has to do schoolwork when he's not in school.  there have been many meltdowns and I expect many more before all is said and done.

I have a senior daughter in high school and a son who has autism and is in his first year of tech school. Both are having issues with extremely high anxiety and now I'm seeing depression.

Their social and emotional needs are taking a serious hit. My son's special needs friends are not receiving needed therapies and are having regressions due to the isolation as well.

My daughter's senior year is a wash, but she's still expected to take an AP exam next month. The digital learning is a joke - the platforms crash every day.

They both are working still - my son at a grocery store and daughter at a fast food restaurant. I'm grateful for that - it's their only normalcy.

I truly don't understand the political/personal/policy considerations driving Trump's reactions since April. There is a way to frame this: America is not afraid; America never quits; America fights for its kids and the future. Instead it's July and we're still flailing.

It would help if Trump would put up other respected voices in the medical community outside of Anthony Fauci. There are many ways to skin a cat and Anthony Fauci's is not the only one. In fact it can be argued persuasively that Fauci's way is easily the most destructive way.

2/ In fact, the report says explicitly that "the initial duration of measures... will be several months."

is therefore population-wide social distancing combined with home isolation of cases and school and university closure.

To avoid a rebound in transmission, these policies will need to be maintained until large stocks of vaccine are available to immunise the population – which could be 18 months or more. Adaptive hospital surveillance-based triggers for switching on and off population-wide social distancing and school closure offer greater robustness to uncertainty than fixed duration interventions and can be adapted for regional use (e.g. at the state level in the US). Given local epidemics are not perfectly synchronised, local policies are also more efficient and can achieve comparable levels of suppression to national policies while being in force for a slightly smaller proportion of the time. However, we estimate that for a national GB policy, social distancing would need to be in force for at least 2/3 of the time (for $R_0$ = 2.4, see Table 4) until a vaccine was available.

However, there are very large uncertainties around the transmission of this virus, the likely effectiveness of different policies and the extent to which the population spontaneously adopts risk reducing behaviours. This means it is difficult to be definitive about the likely initial duration of measures which will be required, except that it will be several months. Future decisions on when and for how long to relax policies will need to be informed by ongoing surveillance.

The measures used to achieve suppression might also evolve over time. As case numbers fall, it becomes more feasible to adopt intensive testing, contact tracing and quarantine measures akin to the strategies being employed in South Korea today. Technology – such as mobile phone apps that

As Neil explicitly stated in the testimony you're all up in arms about - those "new" numbers require the social distancing measures kept in place until enough testing is available to follow South Korea.

All of these teachers pitching "remote learning", they they expecting parents to quit their jobs, or leave their kids home alone? What about those with 3 kids in school who would need to do "remote learning" simultaneously?

And teachers are now actively lobbying AGAINST opening schools. This letter comes from teachers in the @fuhsdstrong - a 10,000-student district in Northern California, including Silicon Valley. I especially like the part where they say parents should do their jobs for them...

Hello, FUHSD Colleagues:

After recently receiving word from the district and county about school re-opening guidelines and expectations for the coming year, a small group of teachers at CHS felt moved to form a small collaborative team and draft a letter to Polly and our School Board advocating a remote / distance learning approach to the upcoming start of the semester. Our concerns about in-person instruction are wide-ranging and driven by our own experiences, lives, disciplines, and observations -- but we hope that when you read the letter linked below you will see some of your own concerns reflected and, in turn, are moved to add your name to it.

A nurse can generally take care of one to two ventilated patients as they require close monitoring. If on vent, generally will require extra IV lines or arterial lines to allow monitoring of oxygen and extra meds (more pharmacy support), respiratory therapists, lab to run tests

Now when we stop suppressing, obviously the virus will come back.

The Imperial report is quite pessimistic about that scenario because it doesn't attempt to model strategies taken in Asia

The @IHME_UW model vs. reality for New York State, April 4: more of the same, 65,400 beds projected, 15,905 actually used (new hospitalizations fell notably day-over-day); 12,000 ICU beds projected, 4,100 used. Still basically fiction, but at least it's not getting MORE wrong.

2/ Unfortunately, though the model updated just now, its projections remain inaccurate for actual use TODAY: for example, it predicts New York state on April 5 will need 24,000 beds and 6,000 ICU beds, about 1/3 more than the actual usage today. Not sure what to say about this...

If we tanked the economy, drove tens of millions out of work, wiped out 401ks of retirees, interrupted the education of our children, & put $2trillion on a credit card for less deaths than the seasonal flu, you might see some civil unrest in this country like we've never seen.

And imagine if it turns out this has been going through the country for months, and they all acted 2-3 months too late. (In the Dems case, while perusing impeachment instead)

This could get very ugly. Hopefully only in the political sense.

3/ And while acknowledging the economic crisis, Vance more or less throws up his hands, saying that it would have happened anyway. But the difference between voluntary social distancing and what we have now is the distance between recession and depression. That's no exaggeration.

1/ I try to analyze dispassionately. But I will admit I am ANGRY about the way we have largely ignored the massive harm lockdowns and school closings have on kids. Remember: anyone under 30 is at almost ZERO risk here (there are always outliers; planes crash but flying is safe).

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10 de abr.

3/ The stress even on healthy families is incredible. And for children in troubled families, the cost is far higher; for those kids, schools may well be the only chance they have to be seen every day by an adult who is not high or abusive.

4/ Of all the choices we've made, sacrificing the mental health of children at zero risk from this illness is the LEAST acceptable. But so many in the media are young and don't have children, or perhaps are married couples with one child (an equation that makes care easier).

My name is and I am an Intervention Specialist (teach special ed). My own son is on the Autism spectrum, on the high functioning end. He has been struggling since this whole lockdown started. He is not a social butterfly, but he does enjoy time with school friends. He needs structure and predictability and that is clearly not happening now. I try to keep a certain structure to our days, but it's hard because I am working, my husband is working and his older brother has lots of schoolwork he also needs help with. The other thing Colin is struggling with is not understanding why he has to do schoolwork when he's not in school.. there have been many meltdowns and I expect many more before all is said and done.

I've never like social media for children because I think it keeps them from face to face interactions which are critical for their growing minds. However, due to the closure, they

I have a senior daughter in high school and a son who has autism and is in his first year of tech school. Both are having issues with extremely high anxiety and now I'm seeing depression.

Their social and emotional needs are taking a serious hit. My son's special needs friends are not receiving needed therapies and are having regressions due to the isolation as well

My daughter's senior year is a wash, but she's still expected to take an AP exam next month. The digital learning is a joke - the platforms crash every day.

They both are working still - my son at a grocery store and daughter at a fast food restaurant. I'm grateful for that - it's their only normalcy.

Why can't the US media and (blue-state) policymakers keep two ideas in mind at once? #SARSCoV2 can be dangerous, especially to the elderly - but to respond by denying kids an education (and generally wrecking the economy and society with lockdowns of dubious value) is a mistake.

Remember - it is only April 21. In most states, schools have been out for only about a month. Closing through the end of the school year means another TWO months of lost schooling, and a five-plus-month break overall...

And there's a lot of evidence that many kids regress during the normal summer break - and that poor kids especially suffer, because their parent(s) may not have the time or resources to help them.

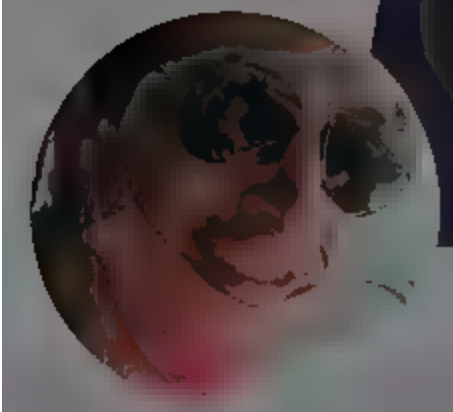
Gov. Tim Walz faces a key decision this week about whether to lift a stay-at-home order for a COVID-19 pandemic that is proving most deadly for long-term care residents, gumming up food production and spreading at a rate that nobody yet comprehends.



The death toll from COVID-19 reached 286 in Minnesota on Monday, but 223 involved long-term care facilities residents — who remain at greatest risk from the coronavirus infection due to age and existing

As you watch this video, remember two points:

1) What we accept as normal ratchets over time if we don't explicitly fight it.

2) When police officers try and fail to exercise authority, they're humiliated; humiliation is dangerous for work that depends on public compliance.

Add those two ideas up and find the future. Next month they don't walk away. They give her a ticket. The month after that they don't give her a ticket, they arrest her. The month after that they don't arrest her, they take her child.

The longer this goes, the worse it will be.

5/ One last point here: Ferguson gives the lockdown credit, which is interesting - the UK only began ita lockdown 2 days ago, and the theory is that lockdowns take 2 weeks or more to work.

An incredible chart: three countries had earlier and more effective “social distancing” than any others: France, Italy, and Spain - the three countries with the WORST epidemics. Wonder why. (Maybe because most transmission is intrafamilial and nosocomial? Just spitballing here.)

1/ Look, I get why people were so scared three or four weeks ago. I was too. But now - for the media to ignore the real demographics and scare people with outlier cases - to ignore the mostly empty hospitals all over the country - to pretend that the models weren't wrong...

The crisis in the US hospital system is real and spreading nationwide: beckershospitalreview.com/finance/45-hos

1. Allentown, Pa.-based Lehigh Valley Health Network has furloughed about 900 employees who work at its physician practices, according to The Morning Call. The email obtained by the publication stated that furloughed workers can return to work after in-person patient visits return to normal levels.

2. Halifax Health, based in Daytona Beach, Fla, has placed 300 staff members on a mandatory four-month furlough, according to The Daytona Beach News Journal. The news comes just nine days after the system asked for volunteers to take furloughs. The health system is also mandating that nonclinical staff not included in the furlough take one day off per week.

3. Citing financial pressure from the COVID-19 pandemic, Escondido, Calif.-based Palomar Health has issued temporary layoffs for 221 employees, according to NBC San Diego. The furloughs will last 21 days and may be extended. Palomar Health said it is facing a significant revenue decline and incurred more when we'd NOT in school....there have been many meltdowns and I expect many more before all is said and done.

I've never like social media for children because I think it keeps them from face to face interactions which are critical for their growing minds. However, due to the closure, they expected to take an AP exam next month. The digital learning is a joke - the platforms crash every day.

They both are working still - my son at a grocery store and daughter at a fast food restaurant. I'm grateful for that - it's their only normalcy.

Hi Alex,

I have 3 children, 2 of whom are special needs.

My son is 4 with autism. His aba therapy ceased coming to our which is 6 hours per day,I, 5 days per week. Without intensive aba he is restless and hyper focused on one interest for days on end.

My daughter is 2 with cerebral palsy. Her physical therapy has ceased and the progress she was making toward walking has stalled completely.

We work with them the best we know throughout the day but we arent trained and we also have jobs.

Thanks

As you watch this video, remember two points:

1) What we accept as normal ratchets over time if we don't explicitly fight it.

2) When police officers try and fail to exercise authority, they're humiliated; humiliation is dangerous for work that depends on public compliance.

Add those two ideas up and find the future. Next month they don't walk away. They give her a ticket. The month after that they don't give her a ticket, they arrest her. The month after that they don't arrest her, they take her child.

The longer this goes, the worse it will be.

6/ Final point: the paper concludes the real bottleneck is in trained staff and "priority should focus not only on increasing [ventilators]... but on growing the number of trained professionals."

But I guess bashing the WH for not nationalizing ventilator production is more fun.

A nurse can generally take care of one to two ventilated patients as they require close monitoring. If on vent, generally will require extra IV lines or arterial lines to allow monitoring of oxygen and extra meds (more pharmacy support), respiratory therapists, lab to run tests

The @IHME_UW model vs. reality for New York State, April 4: more of the same, 65,400 beds projected, 15,905 actually used (new hospitalizations fell notably day-over-day); 12,000 ICU beds projected, 4,100 used. Still basically fiction, but at least it's not getting MORE wrong.

1/ Morning folks. Wondering why @CDCgov is using such aggressive rules for death counts? Look - there's considerable evidence #COVID infections have peaked in the US. Even the POTUS comments last night warning about this being the "toughest week" suggest as much (deaths lag)...

2/ And the emerging data out of Florida, Southern California, etc suggest that this virus - like most respiratory viruses - doesn't do well when the weather warms and UV rays get stronger. Great news! Right? Right? Well... we're at under 9,000 deaths now.

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 5 apr.

3/ Suppose the president is right. And this is the "toughest week." And we average 1,500 deaths a day. That gets us to almost 20,000 deaths by April 12. By then the trend should clearly be down, I don't think it will be arguable...

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 5 apr.

4/ 20,000 deaths, with perhaps that many more coming over the next month (deaths lag). That's terrible! Yeah. It is. But [illegible] is estimating 24,000-63,000 flu deaths this year.

1/ One last point on the [illegible] model: It now predicts about 15,600 New York state deaths. About the only thing the model has gotten right is short term death counts; that figure seems at least marginally plausible...

10 44 145

Alex Berenson
@AlexBerenson

2/ But that implies that the rest of the US will have about 65,000 - 4x+ NYS. Right now, the rest of the country is at about 1.4x NYS - and the epidemic does not seem to be accelerating elsewhere...

3/ And we have seen for the last 3 months that, for whatever reason, regional (or national) disparities don't lessen much once they're in place. If the rest of the US remains at that 1.4x level, deaths ex NY would be about 23,000, and the US total would be a bit under 40,000.

Time to start using more straightforward language and calling out people who don't tell the truth, like @pbump. The original model explicitly accounted for the effect of lockdowns. It was wrong in real-time, embarrassingly so; that's why it's been updated. (It's still wrong.)

A notable shift downward in projected deaths from coronavirus is already being spun as "experts were wrong!!" Instead of "hey, the thing experts said would drive down deaths might be driving down deaths."

3/ So this is yet more evidence #SARSCoV2 has been present for longer and spread wider in the US than previously understood (because the replication cycle is so short and the transmission rate so high, even two weeks could make a 5-15x difference in the number of infections).

An incredible chart: three countries had earlier and more effective “social distancing” than any others: France, Italy, and Spain - the three countries with the WORST epidemics. Wonder why. (Maybe because most transmission is intrafamilial and nosocomial? Just spitballing here.)

1. Allentown, Pa.-based Lehigh Valley Health Network has furloughed about 900 employees who work at its physician practices, according to The Morning Call. The email obtained by the publication stated that furloughed workers can return to work after in-person patient visits return to normal levels.

2. Halifax Health, based in Daytona Beach, Fla, has placed 300 staff members on a mandatory four-month furlough, according to The Daytona Beach News Journal. The news comes just nine days after the system asked for volunteers to take furloughs. The health system is also mandating that nonclinical staff not included in the furlough take one day off per week.

3. Citing financial pressure from the COVID-19 pandemic, Escondido, Calif.-based Palomar Health has issued temporary layoffs for 221 employees, according to NBC San Diego. The furloughs will last 21 days and may be extended. Palomar Health said it is facing a significant revenue decline and incurred more

I have 3 children, 2 of whom are special needs.

My son is 4 with autism. His aba therapy ceased coming to our which is 6 hours per day,I, 5 days per week. Without intensive aba he is restless and hyper focused on one interest for days on end.

My daughter is 2 with cerebral palsy. Her physical therapy has ceased and the progress she was making toward walking has stalled completely.

We work with them the best we know throughout the day but we arent trained and we also have jobs.

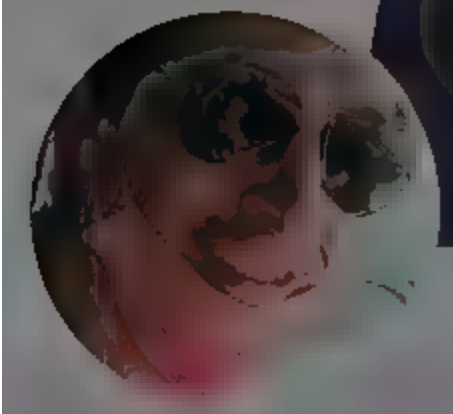
Hello Alex,



My name is nd I've been following you on Twitter quite a bit. I live in Toronto, so we've actually been subjected to a lockdown for a bit longer than U.S. cities.

I'm so happy to see someone like you bringing to light the sheer insanity of the lockdowns and the crushing impact it's having on society. It infuriates me to see such a reckless experiment on humanity.

I have a three year old, so not school aged, but to say it's been a challenge is the understatement of the year. My brother, on the other hand, has two school aged children -

Accordingly, the current goal of C19 hysteria is to keep unemployment growing.

As you watch this video, remember two points:

1) What we accept as normal ratchets over time if we don't explicitly fight it.

2) When police officers try and fail to exercise authority, they're humiliated; humiliation is dangerous for work that depends on public compliance.

Add those two ideas up and find the future. Next month they don't walk away. They give her a ticket. The month after that they don't give her a ticket, they arrest her. The month after that they don't arrest her, they take her child.

The longer this goes, the worse it will be.

Add those two ideas up and find the future. Next month they don't walk away. They give her a ticket. The month after that they don't give her a ticket, they arrest her. The month after that they don't arrest her, they take her child.

The longer this goes, the worse it will be.

HUGE findings from Iran - a true random antibody sample of households finds that 21-33% of people have been infected and the true infection fatality rate is roughly 1 in 1,000 - among the lowest figures yet published.

Even if the death rate has been underreported by a factor of 2 (which seems unlikely), this is maybe the strongest evidence yet that governments should end ALL lockdowns immediately.

1/ Morning folks. Wondering why @CDCgov is using such aggressive rules for death counts? Look - there's considerable evidence #COVID infections have peaked in the US. Even the POTUS comments last night warning about this being the "toughest week" suggest as much (deaths lag)...

2/ And the emerging data out of Florida, Southern California, etc suggest that this virus - like most respiratory viruses - doesn't do well when the weather warms and UV rays get stronger. Great news! Right? Right? Well... we're at under 9,000 deaths now.

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 5 apr.

3/ Suppose the president is right. And this is the "toughest week." And we average 1,500 deaths a day. That gets us to almost 20,000 deaths by April 12. By then the trend should clearly be down, I don't think it will be arguable...

4/ 20,000 deaths, with perhaps that many more coming over the next month (deaths lag). That's terrible! Yeah. It is. But [illegible] is estimating 24,000-63,000 flu deaths this year.

3/ And while acknowledging the economic crisis, Vance more or less throws up his hands, saying that it would have happened anyway. But the difference between voluntary social distancing and what we have now is the distance between recession and depression. That's no exaggeration.

4 23 156

Alex Berenson ✓
@AlexBerenson

4/ Vance broadly ignores all the non-economic effects of the lockdown too - closing schools, even though kids don't appear to be at risk - and the general fraying of society that has already begun, social shaming, neighbors calling out the police on neighbors...

5/ And the move to continue to extend the lockdowns even in places that have seen no epidemic. The longer this continues, the harder it is to fix the economy and society. We have difficult choices to make, but the media panic and focus on outlier cases does not help.

Alex Berenson ✓ @AlexBerenson · □□□. 8
6/ Finally - the choices we DO make cannot have as our primary goal zero new infections or deaths. That is an unrealistic standard and we don't apply it to influenza or TB or other diseases with high overall mortality. Our focus should be avoiding surges and health-system strain.

1/ #COVID-19 is devastating hospitals and employees nationally. But not for the reason you think. They are empty - prepared for a surge that has not come - and burning cash. An executive reports his group's stronger hospitals have "months" of cash; the weaker ones have "weeks."

about 15 other CFOs

- Seeing decline in volume about 40% and similar revenue cut – his low was about 50% cut in volume but only about 2-5% COVID
- Outpatient basically is a zero
- Only exception is hot spots which have a lot of volume but much lower revenue and higher cost because of PPE
- A reasonable way to think about it is down 40-60% at the peak
- No one expects to recapture everything they lost
- Staff
  - Not flexing yet
  - Post spike in likely have to make some adjustments
  - Could take 40% off of earnings and need to reduce staffing by 10% but not close to enough
- Longer term impact

I am going to follow up with data directly from Sweden but it appears deaths are plunging - not a shock, given the ICU trends. Recall, Sweden has no lockdown. Deaths per-capita have been far lower than the U.K., Italy, France, or Spain, just higher than other Nordic countries.

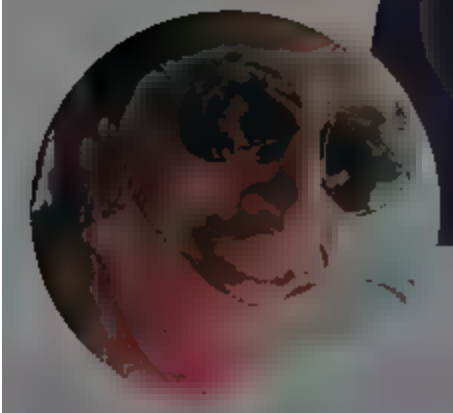
Serious question and I hope you respond with seriousness too.



COVID-19 has killed more Americans in 6 weeks than the flu does in a year.

And that is WITH all the stark measures we've taken.

"Flu +" seems like an understatement, no?

From a physician in Indiana who has signed and reviewed death certificates for almost 50 years: "doctors are using death by COVID-19 as a convenient diagnosis..."

Cause of death fallacy

Lee A. Fischer, M.D.

I'm a family physician who graduated med school in '72 and practiced family med in West Palm Beach for 31 years. During that time I signed hundreds of death certificates. For the last 25+ years I've reviewed and testified in hundreds of medical negligence cases. In the last 5 years 90% involved nursing home negligence. Obviously many of these nursing patients died so I review a lot of death certificates. I can tell you that more often than not the cause of death listed bares no resemblance to the actual cause. Many doctors still list "cardiorespiratory arrest" as

I believe that doctors are using death by COVID-19 as a convenient diagnosis when they don't really know what caused their death. Unless someone has tested + for the virus and had symptoms and died there is no way to attribute their death to COVID-19. As you point out the # of deaths due to the "pandemic" is highly inflated and in my opinion for political gain. Keep spreading the news and your right on point analysis.

If we tanked the economy, drove tens of millions out of work, wiped out 401ks of retirees, interrupted the education of our children, & put $2trillion on a credit card for less deaths than the seasonal flu, you might see some civil unrest in this country like we've never seen.

An incredible chart: three countries had earlier and more effective "social distancing" than any others: France, Italy, and Spain - the three countries with the WORST epidemics. Wonder why. (Maybe because most transmission is intrafamilial and nosocomial? Just spitballing here.)

1/ #COVID—19 is devastating hospitals and employees nationally. But not for the reason you think. They are empty - prepared for a surge that has not come - and burning cash. An executive reports his group's stronger hospitals have "months" of cash; the weaker ones have "weeks."

about 15 other CFOs

- Seeing decline in volume about 40% and similar revenue cut – his low was about 50% cut in volume but only about 2-5% COVID
- Outpatient basically is a zero
- Only exception is hot spots which have a lot of volume but much lower revenue and higher cost because of PPE
- A reasonable way to think about it is down 40-60% at the peak
- No one expects to recapture everything they lost
- Staff
  - Not flexing yet
  - Post spike in likely have to make some adjustments
  - Could take 40% off of earnings and need to reduce staffing by 10% but not close to enough
- Longer term impact

Time to start using more straightforward language and calling out people who don't tell the truth, like @pbump. The original model explicitly accounted for the effect of lockdowns. It was wrong in real-time, embarrassingly so; that's why it's been updated. (It's still wrong.)

Philip Bump @pbump
A notable shift downward in projected deaths from coronavirus is already being spun as "experts were wrong!!" Instead of "hey, the thing experts said would drive down deaths might be driving down deaths."

1/ I try to analyze dispassionately. But I will admit I am ANGRY about the way we have largely ignored the massive harm lockdowns and school closings have on kids. Remember: anyone under 30 is at almost ZERO risk here (there are always outliers; planes crash but flying is safe).

2/ Children, more than anyone else, suffer immediately from the lockdowns. They're denied school. They're denied normal socializing with their friends. In many places they have even - bizarrely - been denied the chance to play outside.

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10 de abr.

3/ The stress even on healthy families is incredible. And for children in troubled families, the cost is far higher; for those kids, schools may well be the only chance they have to be seen every day by an adult who is not high or abusive.

15 195 1,1 mil

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10 de abr.

4/ Of all the choices we've made, sacrificing the mental health of children at zero risk from this illness is the LEAST acceptable. But so many in the media are young and don't have children, or perhaps are married couples with one child (an equation that makes care easier).

1/ I'm going to try to explain this once more for all the blue-checks insisting that they KNOW lockdowns work.

The models failed. In real time. Even in NY state, the April 1 iteration of @IHME_UW model estimated four times the hospitalizations last week as were taking place.

08:54 - 10. апр 2020.

104 1,1 хиљ. 2,8 хиљ.

Alex Berenson ✓ @AlexBerenson · 10. апр

2/ But it's crucial to understand WHY they failed.

There is a TIME LAG between infection, symptoms, hospitalization, ICU care, and death. 5 days on average from infection to symptoms, several more days to hospitalization, 2-3 more to ICU care. These are averages, but correct.

9 152 566

Alex Berenson ✓ @AlexBerenson · 10. апр

3/ The models assumed (not unreasonably) that in places like New York, lockdowns had come TOO LATE. Between March 17 and March 25, hospitalizations in NY rose 7X. The models assumed that because of the time lag, the rise would go on UNTIL THE EFFECTS OF THE LOCKDOWN KICKED IN...

11 139 537

Alex Berenson ✓ @AlexBerenson · 10. апр

4/ By that point, ~5,000 new patients every day would need hospitalization

I was thinking that as well for a while, but this is a pretty convincing counterpoint. Regardless, it's time to get back to life.

From a physician in Indiana who has signed and reviewed death certificates for almost 50 years: "doctors are using death by COVID-19 as a convenient diagnosis..."

Cause of death fallacy

Lee A. Fischer, M.D.

I'm a family physician who graduated med school in '72 and practiced family med in West Palm Beach for 31 years. During that time I signed hundreds of death certificates. For the last 25+ years I've reviewed and testified in hundreds of medical negligence cases. In the last 5 years 90% involved nursing home negligence. Obviously many of these nursing patients died so I review a lot of death certificates. I can tell you that more often than not the cause of death listed bares no resemblance to the actual cause. Many doctors still list "cardiorespiratory arrest" as

AT&T 11:03 AM 68%

Primary

I believe that doctors are using death by COVID-19 as a convenient diagnosis when they don't really know what caused their death. Unless someone has tested + for the virus and had symptoms and died there is no way to attribute their death to COVID-19. As you point out the # of deaths due to the "pandemic" is highly inflated and in my opinion for political gain. Keep spreading the news and your right on point analysis.

3/ Children with autism have had their routines disrupted and are having a difficult time adapting.

I have a senior daughter in high school and a son who has autism and is in his first year of tech school. Both are having issues with extremely high anxiety and now I'm seeing depression.

Their social and emotional needs are taking a serious hit. My son's special needs friends are not receiving needed therapies and are having regressions due to the isolation as well

My daughter's senior year is a wash, but she's still expected to take an AP exam next month. The digital learning is a joke - the platforms crash every day

They both are working still - my son at a grocery store and daughter at a fast food restaurant. I'm grateful for that - it's their only normalcy.

My name is and I am an Intervention Specialist (teach special ed). My own son is on the Autism spectrum, on the high functioning end. He has been struggling since this whole lockdown started. He is not a social butterfly, but he does enjoy time with school friends. He needs structure and predictability and that is clearly not happening now. I try to keep a certain structure to our days, but it's hard because I am working, my husband is working and his older brother has lots of schoolwork he also needs help with. The other thing Colin is struggling with is not understanding why he has to do schoolwork when he's not in school... there have been many meltdowns and I expect many more before all is said and done.

I've never like social media for children because I think it keeps them from face to face interactions which are critical for their growing minds. However, due to the closure, they

Yep, #COVID deaths have soared all the way to an average of 35 a day, where they were in mid-May, when the state had about 1/5 as many cases.

BTW: Texas has 31 million people and about 600 of them die every day.

But it is crucial to understand he taking about a handful of POTENTIAL referrals statewide for this complex procedure - people who are already hospitalized and in trouble - not random folks showing up and being denied care. THAT IS NOT HAPPENING.

Agree or disagree with @govrondesantis's decision to order schools in Florida to reopen fully - and I agree - this is leadership. The man knows the data about risks to kids and he is doing what he thinks is right. No CYA commissions or blue-ribbon panels. Leaders lead.

Florida will require schools to reopen in August despite a surge in coronavirus cases

1/ Morning folks. Wondering why @CDCgov is using such aggressive rules for death counts? Look - there's considerable evidence #COVID infections have peaked in the US. Even the POTUS comments last night warning about this being the "toughest week" suggest as much (deaths lag)...

2/ And the emerging data out of Florida, Southern California, etc suggest that this virus - like most respiratory viruses - doesn't do well when the weather warms and UV rays get stronger. Great news! Right? Right? Well... we're at under 9,000 deaths now.

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 5 apr.

3/ Suppose the president is right. And this is the "toughest week." And we average 1,500 deaths a day. That gets us to almost 20,000 deaths by April 12. By then the trend should clearly be down, I don't think it will be arguable...

34 199 646

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 5 apr.

4/ 20,000 deaths, with perhaps that many more coming over the next month (deaths lag). That's terrible! Yeah. It is. But [illegible] is estimating 24,000-63,000 flu deaths this year.

2/ Unfortunately, though the model updated just now, its projections remain inaccurate for actual use TODAY: for example, it predicts New York state on April 5 will need 24,000 beds and 6,000 ICU beds, about 1/3 more than the actual usage today. Not sure what to say about this...

last posting for my state said peak resource use would be April 9, now says it WAS March 23.

First "social distancing" and school closure started March 18, restaurants, etc., closed March 25.

So we peaked BEFORE the significant closures even began?

1/ #COVID-19 is devastating hospitals and employees nationally. But not for the reason you think. They are empty - prepared for a surge that has not come - and burning cash. An executive reports his group's stronger hospitals have "months" of cash; the weaker ones have "weeks."

about 15 other CFOs

- Seeing decline in volume about 40% and similar revenue cut – his low was about 50% cut in volume but only about 2-5% COVID
- Outpatient basically is a zero
- Only exception is hot spots which have a lot of volume but much lower revenue and higher cost because of PPE
- A reasonable way to think about it is down 40-60% at the peak
- No one expects to recapture everything they lost
- Staff
  - Not flexing yet
  - Post spike in likely have to make some adjustments
  - Could take 40% off of earnings and need to reduce staffing by 10% but not close to enough
- Longer term impact

1/ I'm going to try to explain this once more for all the blue-checks insisting that they KNOW lockdowns work.

The models failed. In real time. Even in NY state, the April 1 iteration of @IHME_UW model estimated four times the hospitalizations last week as were taking place.

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · ಏಪ್ರಿ 10

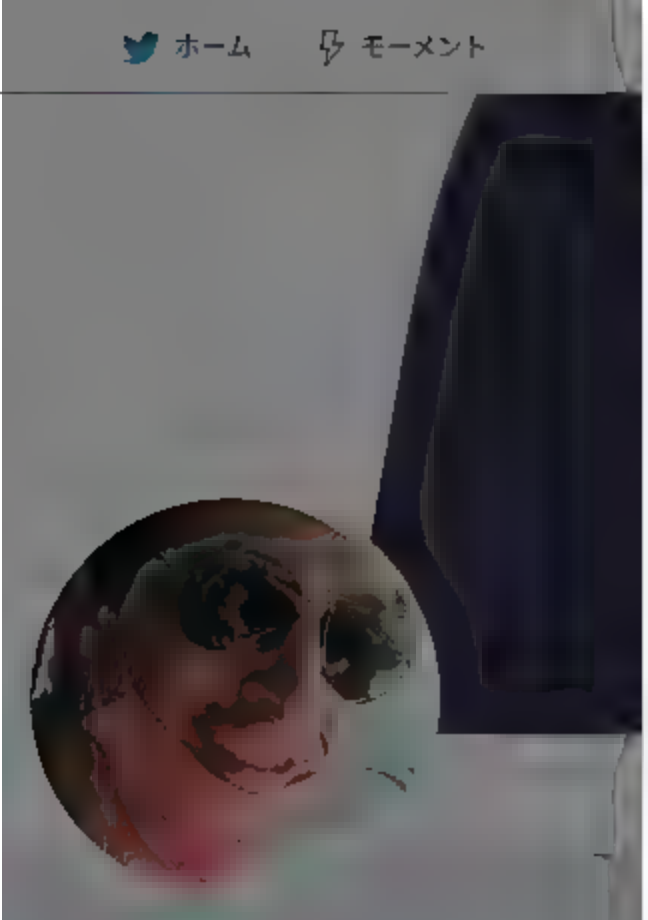
2/ But it's crucial to understand WHY they failed.

There is a TIME LAG between infection, symptoms, hospitalization, ICU care, and death. 5 days on average from infection to symptoms, several more days to hospitalization, 2-3 more to ICU care. These are averages, but correct.



9 152 566

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · ಏಪ್ರಿ 10

3/ The models assumed (not unreasonably) that in places like New York, lockdowns had come TOO LATE. Between March 17 and March 25, hospitalizations in NY rose 7X. The models assumed that because of the time lag, the rise would go on UNTIL THE EFFECTS OF THE LOCKDOWN KICKED IN...

From a physician in Indiana who has signed and reviewed death certificates for almost 50 years: "doctors are using death by COVID-19 as a convenient diagnosis..."

Cause of death fallacy

Lee A. Fischer, M.D.

I'm a family physician who graduated med school in '72 and practiced family med in West Palm Beach for 31 years. During that time I signed hundreds of death certificates. For the last 25+ years I've reviewed and testified in hundreds of medical negligence cases. In the last 5 years 90% involved nursing home negligence. Obviously many of these nursing patients died so I review a lot of death certificates. I can tell you that more often than not the cause of death listed bares no resemblance to the actual cause. Many doctors still list "cardiorespiratory arrest" as

By JEREMY OLSON , STAR TRIBUNE

Gov. Tim Walz faces a key decision this week about whether to lift a stay-at-home order for a COVID-19 pandemic that is proving most deadly for long-term care residents, gumming up food production and spreading at a rate that nobody yet comprehends.

The death toll from COVID-19 reached 286 in Minnesota on Monday, but 223 involved long-term care facilities residents — who remain at greatest risk from the coronavirus infection due to age and existing Professor Neil Ferguson said at a UK parliamentary committee hearing on Wednesday.

Alex Berenson
@AlexBerenson

2/ In fact, the report says explicitly that "the initial duration of measures... will be several months."

16 March 2020 — Imperial College COVID-19 Response Team

...n therefore population-wide social distancing combined with home isolation of cases and school and university closure.

To avoid a rebound in transmission, these policies will need to be maintained until large stocks of vaccine are available to immunise the population – which could be 18 months or more. Adaptive hospital surveillance-based triggers for switching on and off population-wide social distancing and school closure offer greater robustness to uncertainty than fixed duration interventions and can be adapted for regional use (e.g. at the state level in the US). Given local epidemics are not perfectly synchronised, local policies are also more efficient and can achieve comparable levels of suppression to national policies while being in force for a slightly smaller proportion of the time. However, we estimate that for a national GB policy, social distancing would need to be in force for at least 2/3 of the time (for $R_0$ = 2.4, see Table 4) until a vaccine was available.

However, there are very large uncertainties around the transmission of this virus, the likely effectiveness of different policies and the extent to which the population spontaneously adopts risk reducing behaviours. This means it is difficult to be definitive about the likely initial duration of measures which will be required, except that it will be several months. Future decisions on when and for how long to relax policies will need to be informed by ongoing surveillance.

The measures used to achieve suppression might also evolve over time. As case numbers fall, it becomes more feasible to adopt intensive testing, contact tracing and quarantine measures akin to the strategies being employed in South Korea today. Technology – such as mobile phone apps that

It's right there, at the bottom of your screen grab. Here, let me show you.

As Neil explicitly stated in the testimony you're all up in arms about - those "new" numbers require the social distancing measures kept in place until enough testing is available to follow South Korea.

> The measures used to achieve suppression might also evolve over time. As case numbers fall, it becomes more feasible to adopt intensive testing, contact tracing and quarantine measures akin to the strategies being employed in South Korea today. That is why we are being told not to leave our houses! To suppress the virus!!

Now when we stop suppressing, obviously the virus will come back.

The Imperial report is quite pessimistic about that scenario because it doesn't attempt to model strategies taken in Asia

As pointed out - that figure (fig3) does show a rebound when interventions turn off, but the plan is to keep interventions for (or to "pump the breaks") until a solution comes in place

1/ Morning folks. Wondering why @CDCgov is using such aggressive rules for death counts? Look - there's considerable evidence #COVID infections have peaked in the US. Even the POTUS comments last night warning about this being the "toughest week" suggest as much (deaths lag)...

A @ucsantabarbara grad student forwarded this - UCSB is encouraging students to turn each other in for hosting parties. Heard something similar from a parent at another school today too, so this looks like a trend. This will definitely foster a spirit of community and freedom!

Dear Students,

We are writing because we urgently need your help to mitigate the spread of COVID-19 in our community for the benefit of your friends, families, and loved ones.

Alex.

I thought this forwarded might be of interest to you. I am a graduate student at UC Santa Barbara and received this campus wide communication today. It seems the young are waking up to their lack of vulnerability and taking matters into their own hands. The school is openly threatening investigations. If you use this please leave out my personal information.

We need testing for all viruses. We need to figure out exactly what known viruses we are carrying. Rhinoviruses, coronaviruses, influenzas, and others. What if we have something more serious than COVID-19? They care about our health right?

2/ Unfortunately, though the model updated just now, its projections remain inaccurate for actual use TODAY: for example, it predicts New York state on April 5 will need 24,000 beds and 6,000 ICU beds, about 1/3 more than the actual usage today. Not sure what to say about this...

First "social distancing" and school closure started March 18, restaurants, etc., closed March 25.

So we peaked BEFORE the significant closures even began?

Time to start using more straightforward language and calling out people who don't tell the truth, like @pbump. The original model explicitly accounted for the effect of lockdowns. It was wrong in real-time, embarrassingly so; that's why it's been updated. (It's still wrong.)

Philip Bump @pbump
A notable shift downward in projected deaths from coronavirus is already being spun as "experts were wrong!!" Instead of "hey, the thing experts said would drive down deaths might be driving down deaths."

1/ So on Monday, @laurawags of @vice asked me for an interview, and I agreed, under certain very specifuc conditions. Let's see what happened next. Note: Laura and I have never spoken by phone - this email thread is the entirety of our communication:

Laura Wagner

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has biffed coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

Alex Berenson

I'm very short on time. If you want to ask questions over email I will try to answer them, but only on the condition you don't do it Chatter-style and annotate or second-guess me after I have answered (in other words, it would have to be the equivalent of a live on-air interview). You ask, I answer, that's the end of it

It's obvious what's going on. The Public Health weirdos who have been anonymous their whole lives love this attention. The media who use them have clear political goals.

Redfield's nightmare is returning to February, which no one had ever heard of Redfield.

Sorry but what's the old saying the worst scientists end up in positions of authority in government? We don't have a medical doctor in charge of LA County Health Department? And Los Angeles school district and NY are 2 largest districts in the country.

An incredible chart: three countries had earlier and more effective “social distancing” than any others: France, Italy, and Spain - the three countries with the WORST epidemics. Wonder why. (Maybe because most transmission is intrafamilial and nosocomial? Just spitballing here.)

The @stanford antibody testing is out - it estimates ~3% of people in Santa Clara County (CA) have been infected and recovered, 50-plus times the estimate of confirmed active cases. More evidence #SARSCoV2 is far more widespread and thus less dangerous than expected.

Media reasonably consider 20M unemployed Americans as their main contribution to DNC 2020 campaign.

Accordingly, the current goal of C19 hysteria is to keep unemployment growing.

PS. As a bonus the same hysteria also make it easy to falsify elections results by Vote-by-Mail

1/ However, without question it is the single biggest media failure ever. Nothing else is even close, not even the failure to cover the Holocaust. The reason is that the media didn't merely fail to report the truth, it pushed the panic and actually drove government policy...

I live and work here, and have posted charts using "real data" from the county. The public use data changes constantly as dates are added and corrected. The local media reports the alarmist daily reports but does not follow up to track changes (which are much less alarming)

Look at Washington state numbers...we are not even close to projected needs range for todays date, and they updated the model 2 days ago.

Is that undershooting the confidence interval by like 1.5 standard deviations after 10 days from model launch?? What a fucking joke

I don't understand the point of trying to drive panic with stories that are so misleading - and, frankly, so easily checked.

But I guess bashing the WH for not nationalizing ventilator production is more fun.

A nurse can generally take care of one to two ventilated patients as they require close monitoring. If on vent, generally will require extra IV lines or arterial lines to allow monitoring of oxygen and extra meds (more pharmacy support), respiratory therapists, lab to run tests

To all those science-first liberal academics and journalists who would love the United States to be more like Europe - it looks like @realDonaldTrump agrees! Aren't you excited? Great. Let's get our schools open.

Hey @jack_hamilton, James Bennet was not fired. He resigned.

Big difference. Big mistake.

Maybe you should resign? Or be fired.

No. We don't take people's jobs away for making mistakes.

But these days we do take them away for publishing opinions we don't like.

Run along now.

Main outcome measure

Clinical respiratory illness (CRI), influenza-like illness (ILI) and laboratory-confirmed respiratory virus infection.

Results

Against in the cloth mask arm, with the rate of ILI statistically significantly higher in the cloth mask arm (relative risk (RR)=13.00, 95% CI 1.69 to 100.07) compared with the medical mask arm. Cloth masks also had significantly higher rates of ILI compared with the control arm. An analysis by mask use showed ILI (RR=6.64, 95% CI 1.45 to 28.65) and laboratory-confirmed virus (RR=1.72, 95% CI 1.01 to 2.94) were significantly higher in the cloth masks group compared with the medical masks group.

Crucial shortages of personal protective equipment (PPE) have resulted in the US Centers for Disease Control downgrading their recommendations for health workers treating COVID-19 patients from respirators to surgical masks and finally to home-made cloth masks. As authors of the only published randomised controlled clinical trial of cloth masks, we have been getting daily emails about this from health workers concerned about using cloth masks. The study found that cloth mask wearers had higher rates of infection than even the standard practice control group of health workers, and the filtration provided by cloth masks was poor compared to surgical masks. At the time of the study, there had been very little work done in this space, and so little thought into how to improve the protective value of the cloth masks. Until now, most guidelines on PPE did not even mention cloth masks, despite many health workers in Asia using them.

Health workers are asking us if they should wear no mask at all if cloth masks are the only option. Our research does not condone health workers working unprotected. We recommend that health workers should not work during the COVID-19 pandemic without respiratory protection as a matter of work health and safety. In addition, if health workers get infected, high rates of staff absenteeism from illness may also affect health system capacity to respond. Some health workers may still choose to work in inadequate PPE. In this case, the physical barrier provided by a cloth mask may afford some protection, but likely much less than a surgical mask or a respirator.

It is important to note that some subjects in the control arm wore surgical masks, which could explain why cloth masks performed poorly compared to the control group. We also did an analysis of all mask wearers, and the higher infection rate in cloth mask

Health workers are asking us if they should wear no mask at all if cloth masks are the only option. Our research does not condone health workers working unprotected. We recommend that health workers should not work during the COVID-19 pandemic without respiratory protection as a matter of work health and safety. In addition, if health workers get infected, high rates of staff absenteeism from illness may also affect health system capacity to respond. Some health workers may still choose to work in inadequate PPE. In this case, the physical barrier provided by a cloth mask may afford some protection, but likely much less than a surgical mask or a respirator.

It is important to note that some subjects in the control arm wore surgical masks, which could explain why cloth masks performed poorly compared to the control group. We also did an analysis of all mask wearers, and the higher infection rate in cloth mask group persisted. The cloth masks may have been worse in our study because they were not washed well enough – they may become damp and contaminated. The cloth masks used in our study were products manufactured locally, and fabrics can vary in quality. This and other limitations were also discussed.

There are now numerous reports of health workers wearing home made cloth masks, or re-using disposable mask and respirators, and asking for guidance. If health workers choose to work in these circumstances, guidance should be given around their use.

There have been a number of laboratory studies looking at the effectiveness of different types of cloth materials, single versus multiple layers and about the role that filters can play. However, none have been tested in a clinical trial for efficacy. If health workers choose to work using cloth masks, we suggest that they have at least two and cycle them, so that each one can be washed and dried after daily use. Sanitizer spray or UV disinfection boxes can be used to clean them during breaks in a single day. These are pragmatic, rather than evidence-based suggestions, given the situation.

Finally for COVID-19, wearing a mask is not enough to protect healthcare workers – use of gloves and goggles are also required as a minimum, as SARS-CoV-2 may infect not only through the respiratory route, but also through contact with contaminated surfaces and self-contamination.

Governments and hospitals should plan and stockpile proper disposable products such as respirators and surgical masks to ensure

Two lessons we're all learning the hard way right now:

Sometimes the best thing to do is nothing at all.

People who are paid to DO SOMETHING need to be very confident in themselves and their jobs to recommend doing nothing at all. Especially when the media is in full throttle.

Accordingly, the current goal of C19 hysteria is to keep unemployment growing.

PS. As a bonus the same hysteria also make it easy to falsify elections results by Vote-by-Mail

As you watch this video, remember two points:

1) What we accept as normal ratchets over time if we don't explicitly fight it.

2) When police officers try and fail to exercise authority, they're humiliated; humiliation is dangerous for work that depends on public compliance.

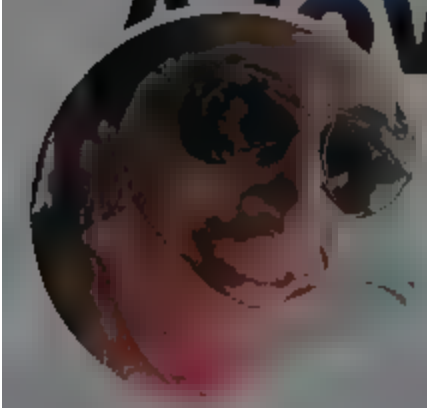
Add those two ideas up and find the future. Next month they don't walk away. They give her a ticket. The month after that they don't give her a ticket, they arrest her. The month after that they don't arrest her, they take her child.



The longer this goes, the worse it will be.

The problem for Team Apocalypse - on lockdowns, masks, school closings, and all the rest - is twofold: all the pre-2020 (aka pre-Orange Man Bad) recommendations are consistent, and nothing that's happened in the last three months contradicts any of them.

3/ In fact, the paper states explicitly "that U.S. hospitals could absorb a maximum of 26,000 to 56,000 additional ventilators at the peak of a national pandemic, as safe use of ventilators requires trained personnel."

4/ In other words, whatever happens with COVID, if we built a million new ventilators, 950,000 would be furniture.

Added bonus: the paper reports the US already has far more critical care beds per-capita than other nations: 35 per 100,000, compared to 12 in Italy, 7 in the UK...

I don't understand the point of trying to drive panic with stories that are so misleading - and, frankly, so easily checked.

1/ This is a remarkable turn from Neil Ferguson, who led the @imperialcollege authors who warned of 500,000 UK deaths - and who has now himself tested positive for #COVID;

2/ He now says both that the U.K. should have enough ICU beds and that the coronavirus will probably kill under 20,000 people in the U.K. - more than 1/2 of whom would have died by the end of the year in any case bc they were so old and sick.

116 1.3K 4.0K

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 26 Mac

3/ Essentially, what has happened is that estimates of the viruses transmissibility have increased - which implies that many more people have already gotten it than we realize - which in turn implies it is less dangerous.

122 1.3K 4.4K

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 26 Mac

4/ Ferguson now predicts that the epidemic in the U.K. will peak and subside within "two to three weeks" - last week's paper said 18+ months of quarantine would be necessary.

The @IHME_UW model vs. reality for New York State, April 4: more of the same, 65,400 beds projected, 15,905 actually used (new hospitalizations fell notably day-over-day); 12,000 ICU beds projected, 4,100 used. Still basically fiction, but at least it's not getting MORE wrong.

Back to Florida: 20 million people, 27,000 empty hospital beds - and a total of 85 new #COVID hospitalizations today (down for the fourth day in a row) 800 new positive tests, the lowest in a week. Hey @gorskon - I thought evidence mattered to you. Was I wrong?

This is insane. How would the lockdown have accomplished this? And if it didn't, what did? Herd immunity b/c this has been here for months? What are the possible explanations?

1/ One last point on the @IHME_UW model: It now predicts about 15,600 New York state deaths. About the only thing the model has gotten right is short term death counts; that figure seems at least marginally plausible...

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 6 Apr

2/ But that implies that the rest of the US will have about 65,000 - 4x+ NYS. Right now, the rest of the country is at about 1.4x NYS - and the epidemic does not seem to be accelerating elsewhere...

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 6 Apr

3/ And we have seen for the last 3 months that, for whatever reason, regional (or national) disparities don't lessen much once they're in place. If the rest of the US remains at that 1.4x level, deaths ex NY would be about 23,000, and the US total would be a bit under 40,000.

An incredible chart: three countries had earlier and more effective "social distancing" than any others: France, Italy, and Spain - the three countries with the WORST epidemics. Wonder why. (Maybe because most transmission is intrafamilial and nosocomial? Just spitballing here.)

2/ I would make a couple of points - it glides over just how concentrated the excess mortality risk appears to be in the very old and sick.Why isn't our focus on protecting THOSE folks rather than going immediately to lockdowns - which are hugely destructive by any measure?

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 8 Apr
3/ And while acknowledging the economic crisis, Vance more or less throws up his hands, saying that it would have happened anyway. But the difference between voluntary social distancing and what we have now is the distance between recession and depression. That's no exaggeration.

Yes, this is a wonderful theory for the public health experts now calling for masks, for it is forever both unfalsiable and unverifiable. No RCT can ever be run on it; the subject of the intervention is purposefully disconnected from the outcome we'd like to measure...

1. Allentown, Pa.-based Lehigh Valley Health Network has furloughed about 900 employees who work at its physician practices, according to The Morning Call. The email obtained by the publication stated that furloughed workers can return to work after in-person patient visits return to normal levels.

2. Halifax Health, based in Daytona Beach, Fla, has placed 300 staff members on a mandatory four-month furlough, according to The Daytona Beach News Journal. The news comes just nine days after the system asked for volunteers to take furloughs. The health system is also mandating that nonclinical staff not included in the furlough take one day off per week.

3. Citing financial pressure from the COVID-19 pandemic, Escondido, Calif.-based Palomar Health has issued temporary layoffs for 221 employees, according to NBC San Diego. The furloughs will last 21 days and may be extended. Palomar Health said it is facing a significant revenue decline and incurred more

1. Allentown, Pa.-based Lehigh Valley Health Network has furloughed about 900 employees who work at its physician practices, according to The Morning Call. The email obtained by the publication stated that furloughed workers can return to work after in-person patient visits return to normal levels.

2. Halifax Health, based in Daytona Beach, Fla, has placed 300 staff members on a mandatory four-month furlough, according to The Daytona Beach News Journal. The news comes just nine days after the system asked for volunteers to take furloughs. The health system is also mandating that nonclinical staff not included in the furlough take one day off per week.

3. Citing financial pressure from the COVID-19 pandemic, Escondido, Calif.-based Palomar Health has issued temporary layoffs for 221 employees, according to NBC San Diego. The furloughs will last 21 days and may be extended. Palomar Health said it is facing a significant revenue decline and incurred more without seroprevalence data to inform epidemic parameters. We measured the seroprevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in Santa Clara County. Methods On 4/3-4/4, 2,50 we tested county residents for antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 using a lateral flow immunoassay. Participants were recruited using Facebook ads targeting a representative sample of the county by demographic and geographic characteristics. We report the prevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in a sample of 3,330 people, adjusting for zip code, sex, and race/ethnicity. We also adjust for test performance characteristics using 3 different estimates: i) the test manufacturer's data, ii) a sample of 37 positives and 30 negatives controls tested at Stanford, and iii) a pooled weighted of both. Results The unadjusted prevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in Santa Clara [illegible] The population prevalence of SARS-CoV-2 antibodies in Santa Clara County implies that the infection is much more widespread than indicated by the number of confirmed cases. Population prevalence estimates can now be used to calibrate epidemic and mortality projections.

The @stanford antibody testing is out - it estimates ~3% of people in Santa Clara County (CA) have been infected and recovered, 50-plus times the estimate of confirmed active cases. More evidence #SARSCoV2 is far more widespread and thus less dangerous than expected.

I've never like social media for children because I think it keeps them from face to face interactions which are critical for their growing minds. However, due to the closure, they expected to take an AP exam next month. The digital learning is a joke - the platforms crash every day.

They both are working still - my son at a grocery store and daughter at a fast food restaurant. I'm grateful for that - it's their only normalcy.

Hi Alex,

I have 3 children, 2 of whom are special needs.

My son is 4 with autism. His aba therapy ceased coming to our which is 6 hours per day,I, 5 days per week. Without intensive aba he is restless and hyper focused on one interest for days on end.

My daughter is 2 with cerebral palsy. Her physical therapy has ceased and the progress she was making toward walking has stalled completely.

We work with them the best we know throughout the day but we arent trained and we also have jobs.

Thanks

I have a three year old, so not school aged, but to say it's been a challenge is the understatement of the year. My brother, on the other hand, has two school aged children -

Media reasonably consider 20M unemployed Americans as their main contribution to DNC 2020 campaign.

Accordingly, the current goal of C19 hysteria is to keep unemployment growing.

PS. As a bonus the same hysteria also make it easy to falsify elections results by Vote-by-Mail

Dear Students:

As Fairfield University plans to Bring its Stags Home for the fall 2020 semester, a safe return to campus life is our most important priority. We want to make sure our community members have all the information they need to maintain the vibrancy of our campus life but do so as safety as possible.

Staying Safe: In order to keep our community safe, there will be several new requirements and expectations within our community.

- Testing and Contact Tracing. There will be statu required COVID-19 testing of all residential students and to their return and select off campus populations. There will also be random weekly tests for up to 10% of the residential students and select off campus populations throughout the semester. Specific details regarding testing will be community members. Masks must be worn at all times in public including classrooms or when around other people. Individuals without masks will be asked to leave classes or dining halls, etc. Once a community member enters a private space – a residence hall bedroom, a private office, or while eating – masks may be removed

Campus Preparations:

Fairfield University's top-tier department is reviewing all offices, classrooms, housing spaces, dining facilities, and multi-purpose spaces throughout campus to determine the physical adjustments necessary to ensure all state mandated social distancing expectations. We will be engaging in more frequent and thorough cleaning protocols, paying particular attention to high-touch areas such as door handles

The [redacted] email is a perfect explanation of why we have to fight masks (which will also be required there). Masks are both a symbol and a marker for everything to come if we don't stand up to pseudoscience and mandates over a virus that is a tiny risk to many of us...

Accepting masks means saying, I give up, I just want my life back, or some piece of it, I will do what you say even if it makes no sense - or invades my privacy in ways I couldn't have imagined in February.

I'm taking a Pascal's gamble perspective on masks. I have no idea if they help or not... but the cost does not seem to outweigh the potential benefit.

More importantly: this is everyone who may need ventilation OVER THE COURSE OF THE EPIDEMIC...

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson

3/ In fact, the paper states explicitly "that U.S. hospitals could absorb a maximum of 26,000 to 56,000 additional ventilators at the peak of a national pandemic, as safe use of ventilators requires trained personnel."

4/ In other words, whatever happens with COVID, if we built a million new ventilators, 950,000 would be furniture.

Added bonus: the paper reports the US already has far more critical care beds per-capita than other nations: 35 per 100,000, compared to 12 in Italy, 7 in the UK...

5/ Here's a link to the paper (thoughtfully provided by the Times) so you can read and judge it for yourself.

I don't understand the point of trying to drive panic with stories that are so misleading - and, frankly, so easily checked.

6/ Final point: the paper concludes the real bottleneck is in trained staff and "priority should focus not only on increasing [ventilators]... but on growing the number of trained professionals."

But I guess bashing the WH for not nationalizing ventilator production is more fun.

A nurse can generally take care of one to two ventilated patients as they require close monitoring. If on vent, generally will require extra IV lines or arterial lines to allow monitoring of oxygen and extra meds (more pharmacy support), respiratory therapists, lab to run tests

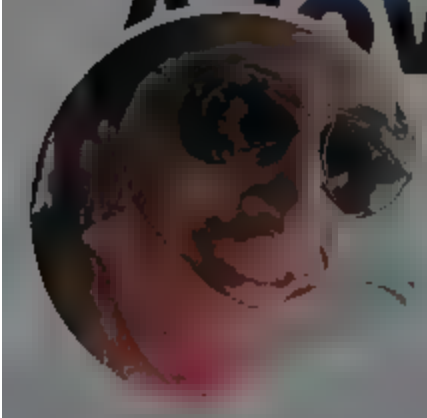
That is why we are being told not to leave our houses! To suppress the virus!!

Now when we stop suppressing, obviously the virus will come back.



The Imperial report is quite pessimistic about that scenario because it doesn't attempt to model strategies taken in Asia

last posting for my state said peak resource use would be April 9, now says it WAS March 23.

First "social distancing" and school closure started March 18, restaurants, etc., closed March 25.

So we peaked BEFORE the significant closures even began?

This could get very ugly. Hopefully only in the political sense.

Time to start using more straightforward language and calling out people who don't tell the truth, like @pbump. The original model explicitly accounted for the effect of lockdowns. It was wrong in real-time, embarrassingly so; that's why it's been updated. (It's still wrong.)

Philip Bump @pbump
A notable shift downward in projected deaths from coronavirus is already being spun as "experts were wrong!!" Instead of "hey, the thing experts said would drive down deaths might be driving down deaths."

I am going to follow up with data directly from Sweden but it appears deaths are plunging - not a shock, given the ICU trends. Recall, Sweden has no lockdown. Deaths per-capita have been far lower than the U.K., Italy, France, or Spain, just higher than other Nordic countries.

Why can't the US media and (blue-state) policymakers keep two ideas in mind at once? #SARSCoV2 can be dangerous, especially to the elderly - but to respond by denying kids an education (and generally wrecking the economy and society with lockdowns of dubious value) is a mistake.

Remember - it is only April 21. In most states, schools have been out for only about a month. Closing through the end of the school year means another TWO months of lost schooling, and a five-plus-month break overall...

And there's a lot of evidence that many kids regress during the normal summer break - and that poor kids especially suffer, because their parent(s) may not have the time or resources to help them.

Gov. Tim Walz faces a key decision this week about whether to lift a stay-at-home order for a COVID-19 pandemic that is proving most deadly for long-term care residents, gumming up food production and spreading at a rate that nobody yet comprehends.

The death toll from COVID-19 reached 286 in Minnesota on Monday, but 223 involved long-term care facilities residents — who remain at greatest risk from the coronavirus infection due to age and existing

Following

Update from a physician in a large Texas city: hospitals have capacity, some high-acuity patients, fear complicating treatment, especially in very old patients. Unfortunately but unsurprisingly, this doc asked for anonymity, citing fear of administrative retaliation.

I sent you some stats fro

Overall, it's true that hospital admissions due to covid are up, but the patients are mostly quite old and have other significant comorbidities. There are plenty of beds. The ICUs are not overrun, but are at near capacity. Part of the problem (as you know) was the shut-down early on which delayed medical care for many. Once the restriction on "elective" procedures was lifted, many patients scheduled for those procedures and so are hospitalized. The other thing is that people really were not going in to the doctor or the hospital because of fear of covid, and now they are sicker from other causes that didn't get treated. I do know that the hospital admin is worried about complex surgical cases which might require ICU beds for recovery. My is not reported any Number of reasons:

1. Elderly sick patients don't make very good decisions—they rely on family caregivers/associates to help them make those decisions. There have been too many times that the patient didn't understand the treatment recommendation, and so just impulsively says "take me home, I don't want all that." The only way to check them family members by phone, get them to try to explain to the patient how the process and then go back and get consent. In one case, this added 5 days to the patient's getting convalescent plasma for Covid. He ultimately died.
2. Elderly patients easily become delirious in the hospital. Typically, the health care team depends on family members to keep the patients calm. Now they are going lots and lots of "chemical restraints" able to be managed by family members.

Primary
3. Family members are not given correct information about their loved one. They might be able to reach a nurse who says "she's fine," meaning that "his condition hasn't changed on my shift," but are not able to talk to the doctor since they have to play phone tag—only they find out the patient's condition is much worse than they thought.
4. The stress and toll on the docs and nurses because patients are angry, confused, and alone—because families had left out and because all of this

I don't understand the point of trying to drive panic with stories that are so misleading - and, frankly, so easily checked.

6/ Final point: the paper concludes the real bottleneck is in trained staff and "priority should focus not only on increasing [ventilators]... but on growing the number of trained professionals."

But I guess bashing the WH for not nationalizing ventilator production is more fun.

A nurse can generally take care of one to two ventilated patients as they require close monitoring. If on vent, generally will require extra IV lines or arterial lines to allow monitoring of oxygen and extra meds (more pharmacy support), respiratory therapists, lab to run tests

YES! taking care of a vent patients requires expertise. Not something any old nurse can do!

Apparently not. If he had, he would have found out I'd specifically addressed this point. I don't manipulate data and I always try to offer the fullest picture (I know that can make the threads long, sorry). The stakes are way too high to do anything else.

As pointed out - that figure (fig3) does show a rebound when interventions turn off, but the plan is to keep interventions for (or to "pump the breaks") until a solution comes in place

You can see the figures under suppression in the 03/16 report are the ones Ferguson talked abt at the committee this week.

1/ Morning folks. Wondering why @CDCgov is using such aggressive rules for death counts? Look - there's considerable evidence #COVID infections have peaked in the US. Even the POTUS comments last night warning about this being the "toughest week" suggest as much (deaths lag)...

2/ And the emerging data out of Florida, Southern California, etc suggest that this virus - like most respiratory viruses - doesn't do well when the weather warms and UV rays get stronger. Great news! Right? Right? Well... we're at under 9,000 deaths now.

3/ Suppose the president is right. And this is the "toughest week." And we average 1,500 deaths a day. That gets us to almost 20,000 deaths by April 12. By then the trend should clearly be down, I don't think it will be arguable...

4/ 20,000 deaths, with perhaps that many more coming over the next month (deaths lag). That's terrible! Yeah. It is. But [illegible] is estimating 24,000-63,000 flu deaths this year.

4/ 20,000 deaths, with perhaps that many more coming over the next month (deaths lag). That's terrible! Yeah. It is. But [illegible] is estimating 24,000-63,000 flu deaths this year.

Back to Florida: 20 million people, 27,000 empty hospital beds - and a total of 85 new #COVID hospitalizations today (down for the fourth day in a row) 800 new positive tests, the lowest in a week. Hey @gorskon - I thought evidence mattered to you. Was I wrong?

This is insane. How would the lockdown have accomplished this? And if it didn't, what did? Herd immunity b/c this has been here for months? What are the possible explanations?

A friend of a friend who works in an ICU in Dallas is telling me that they're getting more and more patients presenting with zombie-like symptoms. Evidently, the PPE isn't stopping them from biting the medical staff resulting in more and more infections. We need better PPE ASAP!

last posting for my state said peak resource use would be April 9, now says it WAS March 23.

First "social distancing" and school closure started March 18, restaurants, etc., closed March 25.

So we peaked BEFORE the significant closures even began?

Great news. @IHME_UW updated its model again - two days after the last revision. Total deaths fell from 81K to under 61K hospitalizations fell from 140K to 90K (1/3 last week's projection) m. The peak is now projected in 3 days. Can we PLEASE talk about reopening the nation?

If we tanked the economy, drove tens of millions out of work, wiped out 401ks of retirees, interrupted the education of our children, & put $2trillion on a credit card for less deaths than the seasonal flu, you might see some civil unrest in this country like we've never seen.

And imagine if it turns out this has been going through the country for months, and they all acted 2-3 months too late. (In the Dems case, while perusing impeachment instead)

This could get very ugly. Hopefully only in the political sense.

Time to start using more straightforward language and calling out people who don't tell the truth, like @pbump. The original model explicitly accounted for the effect of lockdowns. It was wrong in real-time, embarrassingly so; that's why it's been updated. (It's still wrong.)

Philip Bump @pbump
A notable shift downward in projected deaths from coronavirus is already being spun as "experts were wrong!!" Instead of "hey, the thing experts said would drive down deaths might be driving down deaths."

1/ I try to analyze dispassionately. But I will admit I am ANGRY about the way we have largely ignored the massive harm lockdowns and school closings have on kids. Remember: anyone under 30 is at almost ZERO risk here (there are always outliers; planes crash but flying is safe).

3/ The stress even on healthy families is incredible. And for children in troubled families, the cost is far higher; for those kids, schools may well be the only chance they have to be seen every day by an adult who is not high or abusive.

4/ Of all the choices we've made, sacrificing the mental health of children at zero risk from this illness is the LEAST acceptable. But so many in the media are young and don't have children, or perhaps are married couples with one child (an equation that makes care easier).

1/ I'm going to try to explain this once more for all the blue-checks insisting that they KNOW lockdowns work.

The models failed. In real time. Even in NY state, the April 1 iteration of @IHME_UW model estimated four times the hospitalizations last week as were taking place.

08.54 - 10. apr. 2020

1.111 Retweets 2.772 Likes

104  1,1 td  2,8 td

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10. apr.

2/ But it's crucial to understand WHY they failed.

There is a TIME LAG between infection, symptoms, hospitalization, ICU care, and death. 5 days on average from infection to symptoms, several more days to hospitalization, 2-3 more to ICU care. These are averages, but correct.

9  152  565

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10. apr.

3/ The models assumed (not unreasonably) that in places like New York, lockdowns had come TOO LATE. Between March 17 and March 25, hospitalizations in NY rose 7X. The models assumed that because of the time lag, the rise would go on UNTIL THE EFFECTS OF THE LOCKDOWN KICKED IN...

11  139  535

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10. apr.

4/ By that point, >5,000 new patients every day would need hospitalization

Find this thread genuinely bizarre. You are a former reporter and yet missing an obvious data point: CHILDREN CAN BE CARRIERS. Which means if we open schools (or playgrounds, etc.), they can spread the virus to each other and then back to their families.

I am going to follow up with data directly from Sweden but it appears deaths are plunging - not a shock, given the ICU trends. Recall, Sweden has no lockdown. Deaths per-capita have been far lower than the U.K., Italy, France, or Spain, just higher than other Nordic countries.

Serious question and I hope you respond with seriousness too.

COVID-19 has killed more Americans in 6 weeks than the flu does in a year.

And that is WITH all the stark measures we've taken.

"Flu +" seems like an understatement, no?

Can you say more about what you mean?

I'm very short on time. If you want to ask questions over email I will try to answer them, but only on the condition you don't do it Cloutier-style and unrelate or second-guess me after I have answered (in other words, it would have to be the equivalent of a live on-air interview). Why can't the US media and (blue-state) policymakers keep two ideas in mind at once? #SARSCoV2 can be dangerous, especially to the elderly - but to respond by denying kids an education (and generally wrecking the economy and society with lockdowns of dubious value) is a mistake.

O Canada! Canadian physicians - including Canada's first chief public health officer - have just called for ending lockdowns permanently, even if outbreaks continue. "Adults need to go to work. Family and friends need to meet." Read the letter yourself at balancedresponse.ca.

A Balanced Response

COVID-19 is a serious threat to the health and well-being of Canadians. The measures that have been taken to control the spread of disease also represent a serious threat. Both the disease and the control measures have had serious consequences for population health and equity. We believe that a balanced response is required as COVID-19 is a serious public health threat and will remain so until we have a universally available safe and effective vaccine or similar medical treatment. There have been many deaths due to COVID-19 and every single one represents a tragic outcome. However, in overall population health terms COVID-19's direct impact on premature mortality is small. While those under the age of 60 account for Measures for COVID-19 control need to accommodate these health determinants. Children need to go to interact with their peers at child care, schools, sports and social activities, and summer camps. Adults need to go to work. Family and friends need to meet.

The societal costs of maintaining these public health measures, even with some gradual relaxation, are will lead to continued devastation of our society, to a new goal

Our new goal: Minimize the impact of COVID-19 using methods that are practical, effective and compatible with our values and sense of social justice. We need to focus on preventing deaths and serious illness by protecting the vulnerable while allowing society to function.

without seroprevalence data to inform epidemic parameters. We measured the seroprevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in Santa Clara County. Methods On 4/3-4/4, 2,50 adult county residents for antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 using a lateral flow immunoassay. Participants were recruited using Facebook ads targeting a representative sample of the county by demographic and geographic characteristics. We report the prevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in a sample of 3,330 people, adjusting for zip code, sex, and race/ethnicity. We also adjust for test performance characteristics using 3 different estimates: i) the test manufacturer's data, ii) a sample of 37 positives and 30 negatives controls tested at Stanford, and iii) a pooled weighted of both. Results The unadjusted prevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in Santa Clara [illegible] The population prevalence of SARS-CoV-2 antibodies in Santa Clara County implies that the infection is much more widespread than indicated by the number of confirmed cases. Population prevalence estimates can now be used to calibrate epidemic and mortality projections.

Έγινε μέλος την περίοδο Νοέμβριος 2009

when he's not in school...there have been many meltdowns and I expect many more before all is said and done.

I've never like social media for children because I think it keeps them from face to face interactions which are critical for their growing minds. However, due to the closure, they expected to take an AP exam next month. The digital learning is a joke - the platforms crash every day.

They both are working still - my son at a grocery store and daughter at a fast food restaurant. I'm grateful for that - it's their only normalcy.

Hi Alex,

I have 3 children, 2 of whom are special needs.

My son is 4 with autism. His aba therapy ceased coming to our which is 6 hours per day,I, 5 days per week. Without intensive aba he is restless and hyper focused on one interest for days on end.

My daughter is 2 with cerebral palsy. Her physical therapy has ceased and the progress she was making toward walking has stalled completely.

We work with them the best we know throughout the day but we arent trained and we also have jobs.

Thanks

3/ And while acknowledging the economic crisis, Vance more or less throws up his hands, saying that it would have happened anyway. But the difference between voluntary social distancing and what we have now is the distance between recession and depression. That's no exaggeration.

4 23 156

Alex Berenson
@AlexBerenson

4/ Vance broadly ignores all the non-economic effects of the lockdown too - closing schools, even though kids don't appear to be at risk - and the general fraying of society that has already begun, social shaming, neighbors calling out the police on neighbors...

5/ And the move to continue to extend the lockdowns even in places that have seen no epidemic. The longer this continues, the harder it is to fix the economy and society. We have difficult choices to make, but the media panic and focus on outlier cases does not help.

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · ಏಪ್ರಿ 8

6/ Finally - the choices we DO make cannot have as our primary goal zero new infections or deaths. That is an unrealistic standard and we don't apply it to influenza or TB or other diseases with high overall mortality. Our focus should be avoiding surges and health-system strain.

Great news. @IHME_UW updated its model again - two days after the last revision. Total deaths fell from 81K to under 61K hospitalizations fell from 140K to 90K (1/3 last week's projection) m. The peak is now projected in 3 days. Can we PLEASE talk about reopening the nation?

1/ #COVID—19 is devastating hospitals and employees nationally. But not for the reason you think. They are empty - prepared for a surge that has not come - and burning cash. An executive reports his group's stronger hospitals have "months" of cash; the weaker ones have "weeks."

about 15 other CFOs

- Seeing decline in volume about 40% and similar revenue cut – his low was about 50% cut in volume but only about 2-5% COVID
- Outpatient basically is a zero
- Only exception is hot spots which have a lot of volume but much lower revenue and higher cost because of PPE
- A reasonable way to think about it is down 40-60% at the peak
- No one expects to recapture everything they lost
- Staff
  - Not flexing yet
  - Post spike in likely have to make some adjustments
  - Could take 40% off of earnings and need to reduce staffing by 10% but not close to enough
- Longer term impact

1/ I try to analyze dispassionately. But I will admit I am ANGRY about the way we have largely ignored the massive harm lockdowns and school closings have on kids. Remember: anyone under 30 is at almost ZERO risk here (there are always outliers; planes crash but flying is safe).

2/ Children, more than anyone else, suffer immediately from the lockdowns. They're denied school. They're denied normal socializing with their friends. In many places they have even - bizarrely - been denied the chance to play outside.

41 203 1,1 mil

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10 de abr.

3/ The stress even on healthy families is incredible. And for children in troubled families, the cost is far higher; for those kids, schools may well be the only chance they have to be seen every day by an adult who is not high or abusive.

16 195 1,1 mil

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10 de abr.

4/ Of all the choices we've made, sacrificing the mental health of children at zero risk from this illness is the LEAST acceptable. But so many in the media are young and don't have children, or perhaps are married couples with one child (an equation that makes care easier).

1/ I'm going to try to explain this once more for all the blue-checks insisting that they KNOW lockdowns work.

The models failed. In real time. Even in NY state, the April 1 iteration of @IHME_UW model estimated four times the hospitalizations last week as were taking place.

2/ But it's crucial to understand WHY they failed.

There is a TIME LAG between infection, symptoms, hospitalization, ICU care, and death. 5 days on average from infection to symptoms, several more days to hospitalization, 2-3 more to ICU care. These are averages, but correct.

9 152 565

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10. apr.

3/ The models assumed (not unreasonably) that in places like New York, lockdowns had come TOO LATE. Between March 17 and March 25, hospitalizations in NY rose 7X. The models assumed that because of the time lag, the rise would go on UNTIL THE EFFECTS OF THE LOCKDOWN KICKED IN...

11 139 535

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10. apr.

4/ By that point, >5,000 new patients every day would need hospitalization an obvious data point: CHILDREN CAN BE CARRIERS. Which means if we open schools (or playgrounds, etc.), they can spread the virus to each other and then back to their families.

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has biffed coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

Alex Berenson

I'm very short on time. If you want to ask questions over email I will try to answer them, but only on the condition you don't do it Chatter-style and annotate or second-guess me after I have answered (in other words, it would have to be the equivalent of a live on-air interview). You ask, I answer, that's the end of it

1/ This email came from a German reader. To summarize: on April 15 the official German public health/disease control institute published a paper showing that moderate social distancing reduced #SARS_CoV2 spread but the hard lockdown was useless.

2/ Of note, the paper assumes a reproduction cycle of 4 days. Thus the epidemic can spread fast - and will be hugely sensitive to changes in R (how many people 1 infected person infects in turn). At an R of 3.1 with a cycle of 4 days, 1 infection will become 10,000 in a month!

The @IHME_UW model vs. reality for New York State, April 4: more of the same, 65,400 beds projected, 15,905 actually used (new hospitalizations fell notably day-over-day); 12,000 ICU beds projected, 4,100 used. Still basically fiction, but at least it's not getting MORE wrong.

2/ Unfortunately, though the model updated just now, its projections remain inaccurate for actual use TODAY: for example, it predicts New York state on April 5 will need 24,000 beds and 6,000 ICU beds, about 1/3 more than the actual usage today. Not sure what to say about this...

So we peaked BEFORE the significant closures even began?

Great news. @IHME_UW updated its model again - two days after the last revision. Total deaths fell from 81K to under 61K hospitalizations fell from 140K to 90K (1/3 last week's projection) m. The peak is now projected in 3 days. Can we PLEASE talk about reopening the nation?

1/ #COVID-19 is devastating hospitals and employees nationally. But not for the reason you think. They are empty - prepared for a surge that has not come - and burning cash. An executive reports his group's stronger hospitals have "months" of cash; the weaker ones have "weeks."

about 15 other CFOs

- Seeing decline in volume about 40% and similar revenue cut – his low was about 50% cut in volume but only about 2-5% COVID
- Outpatient basically is a zero
- Only exception is hot spots which have a lot of volume but much lower revenue and higher cost because of PPE
- A reasonable way to think about it is down 40-60% at the peak
- No one expects to recapture everything they lost
- Staff
  - Not flexing yet
  - Post spike in likely have to make some adjustments
  - Could take 40% off of earnings and need to reduce staffing by 10% but not close to enough
- Longer term impact

Time to start using more straightforward language and calling out people who don't tell the truth, like @pbump. The original model explicitly accounted for the effect of lockdowns. It was wrong in real-time, embarrassingly so; that's why it's been updated. (It's still wrong.)

Philip Bump @pbump
A notable shift downward in projected deaths from coronavirus is already being spun as "experts were wrong!!" Instead of "hey, the thing experts said would drive down deaths might be driving down deaths."

1/ I try to analyze dispassionately. But I will admit I am ANGRY about the way we have largely ignored the massive harm lockdowns and school closings have on kids. Remember: anyone under 30 is at almost ZERO risk here (there are always outliers; planes crash but flying is safe).

2/ Children, more than anyone else, suffer immediately from the lockdowns. They're denied school. They're denied normal socializing with their friends. In many places they have even - bizarrely - been denied the chance to play outside.

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10 de abr.

3/ The stress even on healthy families is incredible. And for children in troubled families, the cost is far higher; for those kids, schools may well be the only chance they have to be seen every day by an adult who is not high or abusive.

15  195  1,1 mil

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10 de abr.

4/ Of all the choices we've made, sacrificing the mental health of children at zero risk from this illness is the LEAST acceptable. But so many in the media are young and don't have children, or perhaps are married couples with one child (an equation that makes care easier).

1/ I'm going to try to explain this once more for all the blue-checks insisting that they KNOW lockdowns work.

The models failed. In real time. Even in NY state, the April 1 iteration of @IHME_UW model estimated four times the hospitalizations last week as were taking place.

8:54 - 10 abr. 2020

1.111 Retweets 2.774 Me gusta

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10 abr.

2/ But it's crucial to understand WHY they failed.

There is a TIME LAG between infection, symptoms, hospitalization, ICU care, and death. 5 days on average from infection to symptoms, several more days to hospitalization, 2-3 more to ICU care. These are averages, but correct.

9 152 565

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10 abr.

3/ The models assumed (not unreasonably) that in places like New York, lockdowns had come TOO LATE. Between March 17 and March 25, hospitalizations in NY rose 7X. The models assumed that because of the time lag, the rise would go on UNTIL THE EFFECTS OF THE LOCKDOWN KICKED IN...

Serious question and I hope you respond with seriousness too.

COVID-19 has killed more Americans in 6 weeks than the flu does in a year.

And that is WITH all the stark measures we've taken.

"Flu +" seems like an understatement, no?

From a physician in Indiana who has signed and reviewed death certificates for almost 50 years: "doctors are using death by COVID-19 as a convenient diagnosis..."

Cause of death fallacy

Lee A. Fischer, M.D.

I'm a family physician who graduated med school in '72 and practiced family med in West Palm Beach for 31 years. During that time I signed hundreds of death certificates. For the last 25+ years I've reviewed and testified in hundreds of medical negligence cases. In the last 5 years 90% involved nursing home negligence. Obviously many of these nursing patients died so I review a lot of death certificates. I can tell you that more often than not the cause of death listed bares no resemblance to the actual cause. Many doctors still list "cardiorespiratory arrest" as

Primary

I believe that doctors are using death by COVID-19 as a convenient diagnosis when they don't really know what caused their death. Unless someone has tested + for the virus and had symptoms and died there is no way to attribute their death to COVID-19. As you point out the # of deaths due to the "pandemic" is highly inflated and in my opinion for political gain. Keep spreading the news and your right on point analysis.

1/ This email came from a German reader. To summarize: on April 15 the official German public health/disease control institute published a paper showing that moderate social distancing reduced #SARS_CoV2 spread but the hard lockdown was useless.

2/ Of note, the paper assumes a reproduction cycle of 4 days. Thus the epidemic can spread fast - and will be hugely sensitive to changes in R (how many people 1 infected person infects in turn). At an R of 3.1 with a cycle of 4 days, 1 infection will become 10,000 in a month!

3/ Children with autism have had their routines disrupted and are having a difficult time adapting.

I have a senior daughter in high school and a son who has autism and is in his first year of tech school. Both are having issues with extremely high anxiety and now I'm seeing depression.

Their social and emotional needs are taking a serious hit. My son's special needs friends are not receiving needed therapies and are having regressions due to the isolation as well

My daughter's senior year is a wash, but she's still expected to take an AP exam next month. The digital learning is a joke - the platforms crash every day

They both are working still - my son at a grocery store and daughter at a fast food restaurant. I'm grateful for that - it's their only normalcy.

My name is and I am an Intervention Specialist (teach special ed). My own son is on the Autism spectrum, on the high functioning end. He has been struggling since this whole lockdown started. He is not a social butterfly, but he does enjoy time with school friends. His needs structure and predictability and that is clearly not happening now. I try to keep a certain structure to our days, but it's hard because I am working, my husband is working and his older brother has lots of schoolwork he also needs help with. The other thing Colin is struggling with is not understanding why he has to do schoolwork when he's not in school... there have been many meltdowns and I expect many more before all is said and done.

1984 and Animal Farm get the attention, but Homage to Catalonia - Orwell's non-fiction on the Spanish Civil War - might be his best.

Wow, did he hate reporters:

Even if the death rate has been underreported by a factor of 2 (which seems unlikely), this is maybe the strongest evidence yet that governments should end ALL lockdowns immediately.

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 26

3/ In fact, the paper states explicitly "that U.S. hospitals could absorb a maximum of 26,000 to 56,000 additional ventilators at the peak of a national pandemic, as safe use of ventilators requires trained personnel."

4/ In other words, whatever happens with COVID, if we built a million new ventilators, 950,000 would be furniture.

Added bonus: the paper reports the US already has far more critical care beds per-capita than other nations: 35 per 100,000, compared to 12 in Italy, 7 in the UK...

I am stunned this update hasn't received more attention - frankly, in the US it hasn't received any.

1/ Look, I get why people were so scared three or four weeks ago. I was too. But now - for the media to ignore the real demographics and scare people with outlier cases - to ignore the mostly empty hospitals all over the country - to pretend that the models weren't wrong...

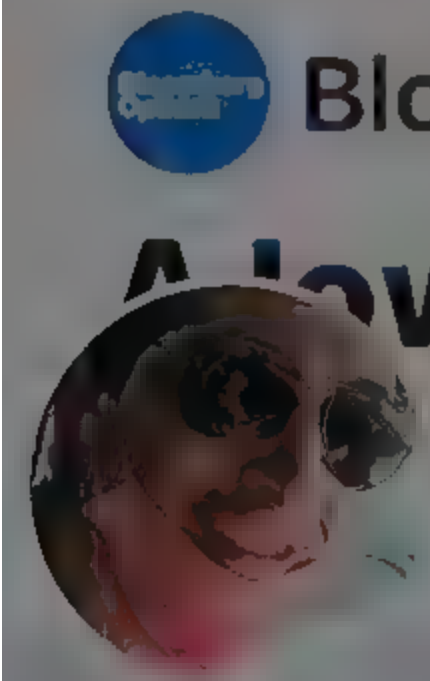
3/ It doesn't feel like panic is driving this anymore. It feels like people just won't admit what's happening.



And we cannot afford that - not with unemployment headed to its worst levels since the Depression, not with children denied school and our rights under siege.

Or continually failing to address why we keep schools open when over 162 children have died from the flu but close them when zero children die from COVID-19. Flu deaths, even kids, don't make headlines or nice "death count"

1. Allentown, Pa.-based Lehigh Valley Health Network has furloughed about 900 employees who work at its physician practices, according to The Morning Call. The email obtained by the publication stated that furloughed workers can return to work after in-person patient visits return to normal levels.

2. Halifax Health, based in Daytona Beach, Fla, has placed 300 staff members on a mandatory four-month furlough, according to The Daytona Beach News Journal. The news comes just nine days after the system asked for volunteers to take furloughs. The health system is also mandating that nonclinical staff not included in the furlough take one day off per week.

3. Citing financial pressure from the COVID-19 pandemic, Escondido, Calif.-based Palomar Health has issued temporary layoffs for 221 employees, according to NBC San Diego. The furloughs will last 21 days and may be extended. Palomar Health said it is facing a significant revenue decline and incurred more

1984 and Animal Farm get the attention, but Homage to Catalonia - Orwell's non-fiction on the Spanish Civil War - might be his best.

Wow, did he hate reporters:

"It was the first time that I had seen a person whose profession was telling lies--unless one counts journalists..."

3/ I guess one might say that the groupthink and lies Orwell saw in Spain informed his writing in 1984 - which was published in 1949, 11 years after Homage to Catalonia.

Apropos of nothing, of course.

As you watch this video, remember two points:

1) What we accept as normal ratchets over time if we don't explicitly fight it.

2) When police officers try and fail to exercise authority, they're humiliated; humiliation is dangerous for work that depends on public compliance.

Add those two ideas up and find the future. Next month they don't walk away. They give her a ticket. The month after that they don't give her a ticket, they arrest her. The month after that they don't arrest her, they take her child.

The longer this goes, the worse it will be.

3/ And while acknowledging the economic crisis, Vance more or less throws up his hands, saying that it would have happened anyway. But the difference between voluntary social distancing and what we have now is the distance between recession and depression. That's no exaggeration.

Alex Berenson ✓
@AlexBerenson

4/ Vance broadly ignores all the non-economic effects of the lockdown too - closing schools, even though kids don't appear to be at risk - and the general fraying of society that has already begun, social shaming, neighbors calling out the police on neighbors...

Alex Berenson ✓ @AlexBerenson
5/ And the move to continue to extend the lockdowns even in places that have seen no epidemic. The longer this continues, the harder it is to fix the economy and society. We have difficult choices to make, but the media panic and focus on outlier cases does not help.

Alex Berenson ✓ @AlexBerenson
6/ Finally - the choices we DO make cannot have as our primary goal zero new infections or deaths. That is an unrealistic standard and we don't apply it to influenza or TB or other diseases with high overall mortality. Our focus should be avoiding surges and health-system strain.

Great news. @IHME_UW updated its model again - two days after the last revision. Total deaths fell from 81K to under 61K hospitalizations fell from 140K to 90K (1/3 last week's projection) m. The peak is now projected in 3 days. Can we PLEASE talk about reopening the nation?

Btw - I have not started looking at the state figures yet to see if they have made the model congruent with (past/current) reality in this revision - does anyone know?

3/ And while acknowledging the economic crisis, Vance more or less throws up his hands, saying that it would have happened anyway. But the difference between voluntary social distancing and what we have now is the distance between recession and depression. That's no exaggeration.

4 23 156

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson

4/ Vance broadly ignores all the non-economic effects of the lockdown too - closing schools, even though kids don't appear to be at risk - and the general fraying of society that has already begun, social shaming, neighbors calling out the police on neighbors...

5/ And the move to continue to extend the lockdowns even in places that have seen no epidemic. The longer this continues, the harder it is to fix the economy and society. We have difficult choices to make, but the media panic and focus on outlier cases does not help.

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 4月8日

6/ Finally - the choices we DO make cannot have as our primary goal zero new infections or deaths. That is an unrealistic standard and we don't apply it to influenza or TB or other diseases with high overall mortality. Our focus should be avoiding surges and health-system strain.

Time to start using more straightforward language and calling out people who don't tell the truth, like @pbump. The original model explicitly accounted for the effect of lockdowns. It was wrong in real-time, embarrassingly so; that's why it's been updated. (It's still wrong.)

Philip Bump @pbump
A notable shift downward in projected deaths from coronavirus is already being spun as "experts were wrong!!" Instead of "hey, the thing experts said would drive down deaths might be driving down deaths."

1/ I try to analyze dispassionately. But I will admit I am ANGRY about the way we have largely ignored the massive harm lockdowns and school closings have on kids. Remember: anyone under 30 is at almost ZERO risk here (there are always outliers; planes crash but flying is safe).

2/ Children, more than anyone else, suffer immediately from the lockdowns. They're denied school. They're denied normal socializing with their friends. In many places they have even - bizarrely - been denied the chance to play outside.

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10 de abr.

3/ The stress even on healthy families is incredible. And for children in troubled families, the cost is far higher; for those kids, schools may well be the only chance they have to be seen every day by an adult who is not high or abusive.

16 195 1,1 mil

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10 de abr.

4/ Of all the choices we've made, sacrificing the mental health of children at zero risk from this illness is the LEAST acceptable. But so many in the media are young and don't have children, or perhaps are married couples with one child (an equation that makes care easier).

I am going to follow up with data directly from Sweden but it appears deaths are plunging - not a shock, given the ICU trends. Recall, Sweden has no lockdown. Deaths per-capita have been far lower than the U.K., Italy, France, or Spain, just higher than other Nordic countries.

Why can't the US media and (blue-state) policymakers keep two ideas in mind at once? #SARSCoV2 can be dangerous, especially to the elderly - but to respond by denying kids an education (and generally wrecking the economy and society with lockdowns of dubious value) is a mistake.

1/ Kudos to @startribune for becoming the first big newspaper to publish a balanced article on the issues around lockdowns. It mentions the risks to food production and skyrocketing unemployment up high, notes that 80% of the state's deaths are in long-term care facilities...

Gov. Tim Walz faces a key decision this week about whether to lift a stay-at-home order for a COVID-19 pandemic that is proving most deadly for long-term care residents, gumming up food production and spreading at a rate that nobody yet comprehends.

The death toll from COVID-19 reached 286 in Minnesota on Monday, but 223 involved long-term care facilities residents — who remain at greatest risk from the coronavirus infection due to age and existing

1/ Herewith, the rules for the 2020/21 academic year from Amherst Prison, I mean College. Students banned from each other's dorms. No off-campus "guests" in campus buildings. No unplanned parties. Students must have a "legitimate need" and register to leave campus at all (!)...

As we think about how to approach joining each other on campus during this pandemic, whether it is this fall or in the spring, our goal is to create expectations that reduce risk in the hopes of having the healthiest community possible.

Below is a preview of expectations for students living on campus this academic year (expectations may be modified for the spring to reflect the realities of the pandemic and/or changing guidance).

We expect all students to do their part to protect themselves and other members of the campus and surrounding communities. Each of us has a responsibility for our own individual actions not only in support of our own health but because we have a collective responsibility for the wellbeing of Here's the problem. Even if masks are physically harmless (and it is NOT clear that cloth masks are, as the Vietnam study shows), mandating them is an effort at government control based on pseudoscience. And we've had far, far too much of that since March.

3/ Further, although deaths lag, the Sunbelt spike has now gone on long enough that the pig should be making its way through the python - that is, deaths typically occur 14-18 days after a positive test and 10-14 after hospitalizations. (In NY the gap was shorter, actually.)

3/ And we have seen for the last 3 months that, for whatever reason, regional (or national) disparities don't lessen much once they're in place. If the rest of the US remains at that 1.4x level, deaths ex NY would be about 23,000, and the US total would be a bit under 40,000.

If we tanked the economy, drove tens of millions out of work, wiped out 401ks of retirees, interrupted the education of our children, & put $2trillion on a credit card for less deaths than the seasonal flu, you might see some civil unrest in this country like we've never seen.

And imagine if it turns out this has been going through the country for months, and they all acted 2-3 months too late. (In the Dems case, while perusing impeachment instead)

This could get very ugly. Hopefully only in the political sense.

Time to start using more straightforward language and calling out people who don't tell the truth, like @pbump. The original model explicitly accounted for the effect of lockdowns. It was wrong in real-time, embarrassingly so; that's why it's been updated. (It's still wrong.)

Philip Bump @pbump
A notable shift downward in projected deaths from coronavirus is already being spun as "experts were wrong!!" Instead of "hey, the thing experts said would drive down deaths might be driving down deaths."

1/ I try to analyze dispassionately. But I will admit I am ANGRY about the way we have largely ignored the massive harm lockdowns and school closings have on kids. Remember: anyone under 30 is at almost ZERO risk here (there are always outliers; planes crash but flying is safe).

3/ The stress even on healthy families is incredible. And for children in troubled families, the cost is far higher; for those kids, schools may well be the only chance they have to be seen every day by an adult who is not high or abusive.

4/ Of all the choices we've made, sacrificing the mental health of children at zero risk from this illness is the LEAST acceptable. But so many in the media are young and don't have children, or perhaps are married couples with one child (an equation that makes care easier).

1/ I'm going to try to explain this once more for all the blue-checks insisting that they KNOW lockdowns work.

The models failed. In real time. Even in NY state, the April 1 iteration of @IHME_UW model estimated four times the hospitalizations last week as were taking place.

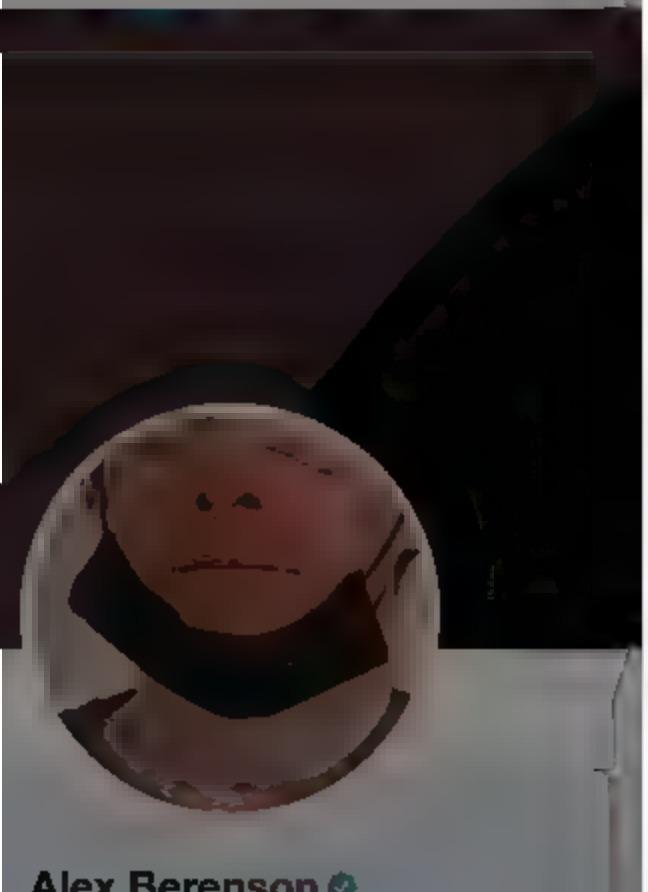
2/ But it's crucial to understand WHY they failed.



There is a TIME LAG between infection, symptoms, hospitalization, ICU care, and death. 5 days on average from infection to symptoms, several more days to hospitalization, 2-3 more to ICU care. These are averages, but correct.

9 152 565

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10 apr.

3/ The models assumed (not unreasonably) that in places like New York, lockdowns had come TOO LATE. Between March 17 and March 25, hospitalizations in NY rose 7X. The models assumed that because of the time lag, the rise would go on UNTIL THE EFFECTS OF THE LOCKDOWN KICKED IN...

2/ In fact, the report says explicitly that "the initial duration of measures... will be several months."

n therefore population-wide social distancing combined with home isolation of cases and school and university closure.

To avoid a rebound in transmission, these policies will need to be maintained until large stocks of vaccine are available to immunise the population – which could be 18 months or more. Adaptive hospital surveillance-based triggers for switching on and off population-wide social distancing and school closure offer greater robustness to uncertainty than fixed duration interventions and can be adapted for regional use (e.g. at the state level in the US). Given local epidemics are not perfectly synchronised, local policies are also more efficient and can achieve comparable levels of suppression to national policies while being in force for a slightly smaller proportion of the time. However, we estimate that for a national GII policy, social distancing would need to be in force for at least 2/3 of the time (for $R_0$ = 2.4, see Table 4) until a vaccine was available.

However, there are very large uncertainties around the transmission of this virus, the likely effectiveness of different policies and the extent to which the population spontaneously adopts risk reducing behaviours. This means it is difficult to be definitive about the likely initial duration of measures which will be required, except that it will be several months. Future decisions on when and for how long to relax policies will need to be informed by ongoing surveillance.

The measures used to achieve suppression might also evolve over time. As case numbers fall, it becomes more feasible to adopt intensive testing, contact tracing and quarantine measures akin to

Back to Florida: 20 million people, 27,000 empty hospital beds - and a total of 85 new #COVID hospitalizations today (down for the fourth day in a row) 800 new positive tests, the lowest in a week. Hey @gorskon - I thought evidence mattered to you. Was I wrong?

This is insane. How would the lockdown have accomplished this? And if it didn't, what did? Herd immunity b/c this has been here for months? What are the possible explanations?

3/ Children with autism have had their routines disrupted and are having a difficult time adapting.

My name is and I am an Intervention Specialist (teach special ed). My own son is on the Autism spectrum, on the high functioning end. He has been struggling since this whole lockdown started. He is not a social butterfly, but he does enjoy time with school friends. He needs structure and predictability and that is clearly not happening now. I try to keep a certain structure to our days, but it's hard because I am working, my husband is working and his older brother has lots of schoolwork he also needs help with. The other thing Colin is struggling with is not understanding why he has to do schoolwork when he's not in school.. there have been many meltdowns and I expect many more before all is said and done.

I've never like social media for children because I think it keeps them from face to face interactions which are critical for their growing minds. However, due to the closure, they

I have a senior daughter in high school and a son who has autism and is in his first year of tech school. Both are having issues with extremely high anxiety and now I'm seeing depression.

Their social and emotional needs are taking a serious hit. My son's special needs friends are not receiving needed therapies and are having regressions due to the isolation as well

My daughter's senior year is a wash, but she's still expected to take an AP exam next month. The digital learning is a joke - the platforms crash every day.

They both are working still - my son at a grocery store and daughter at a fast food restaurant. I'm grateful for that - it's their only normalcy.

Gov. Tim Walz faces a key decision this week about whether to lift a stay-at-home order for a COVID-19 pandemic that is proving most deadly for long-term care residents, gumming up food production and spreading at a rate that nobody yet comprehends.

The death toll from COVID-19 reached 286 in Minnesota on Monday, but 223 involved long-term care facilities residents — who remain at greatest risk from the coronavirus infection due to age and existing

1/ One last point on the [illegible] model: It now predicts about 15,600 New York state deaths. About the only thing the model has gotten right is short term death counts; that figure seems at least marginally plausible...

2/ But that implies that the rest of the US will have about 65,000 - 4x+ NYS. Right now, the rest of the country is at about 1.4x NYS - and the epidemic does not seem to be accelerating elsewhere...

3/ And while acknowledging the economic crisis, Vance more or less throws up his hands, saying that it would have happened anyway. But the difference between voluntary social distancing and what we have now is the distance between recession and depression. That's no exaggeration.

Alex Berenson ✓
@AlexBerenson

4/ Vance broadly ignores all the non-economic effects of the lockdown too - closing schools, even though kids don't appear to be at risk - and the general fraying of society that has already begun, social shaming, neighbors calling out the police on neighbors...

Alex Berenson ✓ @AlexBerenson · 5/ And the move to continue to extend the lockdowns even in places that have seen no epidemic. The longer this continues, the harder it is to fix the economy and society. We have difficult choices to make, but the media panic and focus on outlier cases does not help.

Alex Berenson ✓ @AlexBerenson · 6/ Finally - the choices we DO make cannot have as our primary goal zero new infections or deaths. That is an unrealistic standard and we don't apply it to influenza or TB or other diseases with high overall mortality. Our focus should be avoiding surges and health-system strain.

Time to start using more straightforward language and calling out people who don't tell the truth, like @pbump. The original model explicitly accounted for the effect of lockdowns. It was wrong in real-time, embarrassingly so; that's why it's been updated. (It's still wrong.)

Philip Bump @pbump
A notable shift downward in projected deaths from coronavirus is already being spun as "experts were wrong!!" Instead of "hey, the thing experts said would drive down deaths might be driving down deaths."

1/ I'm going to try to explain this once more for all the blue-checks insisting that they KNOW lockdowns work.

3/ The models assumed (not unreasonably) that in places like New York, lockdowns had come TOO LATE. Between March 17 and March 25, hospitalizations in NY rose 7X. The models assumed that because of the time lag, the rise would go on UNTIL THE EFFECTS OF THE LOCKDOWN KICKED IN...

2/ In fact, the report says explicitly that "the initial duration of measures... will be several months."

n therefore population-wide social distancing combined with home isolation of cases and school and university closure.

To avoid a rebound in transmission, these policies will need to be maintained until large stocks of vaccine are available to immunise the population – which could be 18 months or more. Adaptive hospital surveillance-based triggers for switching on and off population-wide social distancing and school closure offer greater robustness to uncertainty than fixed duration interventions and can be adapted for regional use (e.g. at the state level in the US). Given local epidemics are not perfectly synchronised, local policies are also more efficient and can achieve comparable levels of suppression to national policies while being in force for a slightly smaller proportion of the time. However, we estimate that for a national GB policy, social distancing would need to be in force for at least 2/3 of the time (for $R_0 = 2.4$, see Table 4) until a vaccine was available.

However, there are very large uncertainties around the transmission of this virus, the likely effectiveness of different policies and the extent to which the population spontaneously adopts risk reducing behaviours. This means it is difficult to be definitive about the likely initial duration of measures which will be required, except that it will be several months. Future decisions on when and for how long to relax policies will need to be informed by ongoing surveillance.

The measures used to achieve suppression might also evolve over time. As case numbers fall, it becomes more feasible to adopt intensive testing, contact tracing and quarantine measures akin to

As pointed out - that figure (fig3) does show a rebound when interventions turn off, but the plan is to keep interventions for (or to "pump the breaks") until a solution comes in place

You can see the figures under suppression in the 03/16 report are the ones Ferguson talked abt at the committee this week.

1/ As a reporter, I try not to question people's motives. Best not to try to see into anyone's head. But when I write novels, motive is sort of my job. And I'd like to put my novelist hat on for a minute and tell a story. Remember, it's a story – the character is fictional.

1/ So on Monday, @laurawags of @vice asked me for an interview, and I agreed, under certain very specifuc conditions. Let's see what happened next. Note: Laura and I have never spoken by phone - this email thread is the entirety of our communication:

Laura Wagner

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has biffed coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

Alex Berenson

I'm very short on time. If you want to ask questions over email I will try to answer them, but only on the condition you don't do it Chatbot-style and annotate or second-guess me after I have answered (in other words, it would have to be the equivalent of a live on-air interview). You ask, I answer, that's the end of it

3/ Children with autism have had their routines disrupted and are having a difficult time adapting.

My name is and I am an Intervention Specialist (teach special ed). My own son is on the Autism spectrum, on the high functioning end. He has been struggling since this whole lockdown started. He is not a social butterfly, but he does enjoy time with school friends. He needs structure and predictability and that is clearly not happening now. I try to keep a certain structure to our days, but it's hard because I am working, my husband is working and his older brother has lots of schoolwork he also needs help with. The other thing Colin is struggling with is not understanding why he has to do schoolwork when he's not in school.. there have been many meltdowns and I expect many more before all is said and done.

I've never like social media for children because I think it keeps them from face to face interactions which are critical for their growing minds. However, due to the closure, they

I have a senior daughter in high school and a son who has autism and is in his first year of tech school. Both are having issues with extremely high anxiety and now I'm seeing depression.

Their social and emotional needs are taking a serious hit. My son's special needs friends are not receiving needed therapies and are having regressions due to the isolation as well

My daughter's senior year is a wash, but she's still expected to take an AP exam next month. The digital learning is a joke - the platforms crash every day.

They both are working still - my son at a grocery store and daughter at a fast food restaurant. I'm grateful for that - it's their only normalcy.

2/ This number is not fully comparable to the New York April figures, because the epidemic has gone on long enough that there is much more backdating now (so current counts may be somewhat inflated); but on its face it translates into a death rate of about 10% of NY's peak days.

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson

3/ Further, although deaths lag, the Sunbelt spike has now gone on long enough that the pig should be making its way through the python - that is, deaths typically occur 14-18 days after a positive test and 10-14 after hospitalizations. (In NY the gap was shorter, actually.)

4/ In fact, after adjusting for that two week lag, Florida and Texas are reporting relatively low CASE fatality rates right now; multiplying actual v. reported cases by 10x (this is probably low but they have been testing heavily) puts the IFR right in the 0.2%-0.3% we'd expect.

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 3h

5/ If, as serology studies have suggested, the actual v. reported rate is more like 20x (i.e. for every positive test 20 people have had [illegible]), the infection fatality rate will be even lower (possible if treatments have improved or we are protecting nursing homes better).

1/ Morning folks. Wondering why @CDCgov is using such aggressive rules for death counts? Look - there's considerable evidence #COVID infections have peaked in the US. Even the POTUS comments last night warning about this being the "toughest week" suggest as much (deaths lag)...

Time to start using more straightforward language and calling out people who don't tell the truth, like @pbump. The original model explicitly accounted for the effect of lockdowns. It was wrong in real-time, embarrassingly so; that's why it's been updated. (It's still wrong.)

Philip Bump @pbump
A notable shift downward in projected deaths from coronavirus is already being spun as "experts were wrong!!" Instead of "hey, the thing experts said would drive down deaths might be driving down deaths."

4/ Of all the choices we've made, sacrificing the mental health of children at zero risk from this illness is the LEAST acceptable. But so many in the media are young and don't have children, or perhaps are married couples with one child (an equation that makes care easier).

1/ I'm going to try to explain this once more for all the blue-checks insisting that they KNOW lockdowns work.

The models failed. In real time. Even in NY state, the April 1 iteration of @IHME_UW model estimated four times the hospitalizations last week as were taking place.

104 1,1 N 2,8 N

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10 thg 4

2/ But it's crucial to understand WHY they failed.

There is a TIME LAG between infection, symptoms, hospitalization, ICU care, and death. 5 days on average from infection to symptoms, several more days to hospitalization, 2-3 more to ICU care. These are averages, but correct.

9 152 565

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10 thg 4

3/ The models assumed (not unreasonably) that in places like New York, lockdowns had come TOO LATE. Between March 17 and March 25, hospitalizations in NY rose 7X. The models assumed that because of the time lag, the rise would go on UNTIL THE EFFECTS OF THE LOCKDOWN KICKED IN...

11 139 535

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10 thg 4

4/ By that point, >5,000 new patients every day would need hospitalization

4/ In fact, after adjusting for that two week lag, Florida and Texas are reporting relatively low CASE fatality rates right now; multiplying actual v. reported cases by 10x (this is probably low but they have been testing heavily) puts the IFR right in the 0.2%-0.3% we'd expect.

1/ This email came from a German reader. To summarize: on April 15 the official German public health/disease control institute published a paper showing that moderate social distancing reduced #SARS_CoV2 spread but the hard lockdown was useless.

2/ Of note, the paper assumes a reproduction cycle of 4 days. Thus the epidemic can spread fast - and will be hugely sensitive to changes in R (how many people 1 infected person infects in turn). At an R of 3.1 with a cycle of 4 days, 1 infection will become 10,000 in a month!

If the droplets from asymptomatic people were carrying such significant virus load why is the PCR test so invasive then? Just spitting on it should be enough to trace the virus.

Gov. Tim Walz faces a key decision this week about whether to lift a stay-at-home order for a COVID-19 pandemic that is proving most deadly for long-term care residents, gumming up food production and spreading at a rate that nobody yet comprehends.

The death toll from COVID-19 reached 286 in Minnesota on Monday, but 223 involved long-term care facilities residents — who remain at greatest risk from the coronavirus infection due to age and existing Trump makes lots of mistakes but what choice did he have in this case? The schools in many states clearly were not headed for reopening even before he spoke. He didn't politicize this issue; it came to him that way.

From NJ, an honest mask campaign: masks have been shown to "decrease the release of droplets from people's mouths, which can carry infectious particles."

Yep. And THAT'S ABOUT IT.

Also, they make great parking lot decorations. And you'll never forget what you had for lunch.

Face coverings, along with social distancing, staying home when you are sick and good hand hygiene, are vital tools in the fight against COVID-19. Wearing a face covering or mask has been shown to dramatically decrease the release of droplets from people's mouths, which can carry infectious particles. The New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection has created a Mask Up, New Jersey! toolkit to encourage everyone to wear a mask in outdoor public spaces. Please help us remind New Jerseyans to mask up by sharing these resources on social media channels and at your agencies.

We expect all students to do their part to protect themselves and other members of the campus and surrounding communities. Each of us has a responsibility for our own individual actions not only in support of our own health but because we have a collective responsibility for the wellbeing of

Thanks for noticing. I learned when I wrote Tell Your Children that "cherry-pick" is how the side with the losing argument says, "presenting facts we don't like and can't answer."

It and "misrepresents" (when used against verbatim quotes) are the two great signs of weaseling.

When hospitals deny families access to their dying relatives, everyone suffers. From a man whose father died of cancer in Houston this week: “he was alone until the last few hours of his life.” I know hospitals want to protect patients from #covid, but this is a cruel choice.

Houston on June 19. By all accounts, this is a very reputable facility with an excellent reputation. He was already a stage 4 cancer patient, and needed care to address various complications from medication and the cancer. Due to the aggressive nature of his cancer, and pre-existing conditions (not covid), this admission rapidly transitioned from addressing complications to fighting for survival.

Dad would eventually pass away on July 7, 18 days after admission. And he was alone until the last few hours of his life.

Think about that. A cancer patient literally fighting for survival was not allowed to have visitors. FOR 18 DAYS. His wife was across the street in a hotel, but not allowed to visit. I was actually told by a doctor not to fly to Houston, as I wouldn't be allowed in.

An incredible chart: three countries had earlier and more effective “social distancing” than any others: France, Italy, and Spain - the three countries with the WORST epidemics. Wonder why. (Maybe because most transmission is intrafamilial and nosocomial? Just spitballing here.)

1/ Yes, the geniuses at @IHME_UW have updated their model again. According to them, we are now PAST the peak of hospitalizations - which were cut yet again, to 57,000 beds from 94,000 in the previous forecast (and 262,000 in the April 1 forecast - April Fool's!)...

Hello Alex,

My name is nd I've been following you on Twitter quite a bit. I live in oronto, so we've actually been subjected to a lockdown for a bit longer than U.S. cities.

I'm so happy to see someone like you bringing to light the sheer insanity of the lockdowns and the crushing impact it's having on society. It infuriates me to see such a reckless experiment on humanity.

I have a three year old, so not school aged, but to say it's been a challenge is the understatement of the year. My brother, on the other hand, has two school aged children -

Media reasonably consider 20M unemployed Americans as their main contribution to DNC 2020 campaign.

Accordingly, the current goal of C19 hysteria is to keep unemployment growing.

PS. As a bonus the same hysteria also make it easy to falsify elections results by Vote-by-Mail

1/ Let's talk about the #sarscov2 "catastrophe" in the Sunbelt. Positive tests are running high. Hospitals are fuller but not full. And now, yes, deaths have risen.

How much? AZ/FL/TX - with 60 million people - reported 242 deaths combined today (down from 293 yesterday)...

2/ This number is not fully comparable to the New York April figures, because the epidemic has gone on long enough that there is much more backdating now (so current counts may be somewhat inflated); but on its face it translates into a death rate of about 10% of NY's peak days.

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10h

3/ Further, although deaths lag, the Sunbelt spike has now gone on long enough that the pig should be making its way through the python - that is, deaths typically occur 14-18 days after a positive test and 10-14 after hospitalizations. (In NY the gap was shorter, actually.)

12 80 434

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 10h

4/ In fact, after adjusting for that two week lag, Florida and Texas are reporting relatively low CASE fatality rates right now; multiplying actual v. reported cases by 10x (this is probably low but they have been testing heavily) puts the IFR

2/ The number comes from a March 19 SCCM paper:

"[One estimate is that 1/2 of] ICU admissions (960,000) would require ventilatory support. Such projections are gross estimates."

More importantly: this is everyone who may need ventilation OVER THE COURSE OF THE EPIDEMIC...

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 26

3/ In fact, the paper states explicitly "that U.S. hospitals could absorb a maximum of 26,000 to 56,000 additional ventilators at the peak of a national pandemic, as safe use of ventilators requires trained personnel."

4 196 512

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 26

4/ In other words, whatever happens with COVID, if we built a million new ventilators, 950,000 would be furniture.

Added bonus: the paper reports the US already has far more critical care beds per-capita than other nations: 35 per 100,000, compared to 12 in Italy, 7 in the UK...

6/ Final point: the paper concludes the real bottleneck is in trained staff and "priority should focus not only on increasing [ventilators]... but on growing the number of trained professionals."

But I guess bashing the WH for not nationalizing ventilator production is more fun.

A nurse can generally take care of one to two ventilated patients as they require close monitoring. If on vent, generally will require extra IV lines or arterial lines to allow monitoring of oxygen and extra meds (more pharmacy support), respiratory therapists, lab to run tests

Carmella Piccolo @Sleeverless
YES! taking care of a vent patients requires expertise. Not something any old nurse can do!

Why can't the US media and (blue-state) policymakers keep two ideas in mind at once? #SARSCoV2 can be dangerous, especially to the elderly - but to respond by denying kids an education (and generally wrecking the economy and society with lockdowns of dubious value) is a mistake.

And there's a lot of evidence that many kids regress during the normal summer break - and that poor kids especially suffer, because their parent(s) may not have the time or resources to help them.

Because many of the states ratified and signed into law emergency powers for governors to use. It's quite broad and would be a tough battle to win in the courts.

running high. Hospitals are fuller but not full. And now, yes, deaths have risen.

How much? AZ/FL/TX - with 60 million people - reported 242 deaths combined today (down from 293 yesterday)...

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson Follow

2/ This number is not fully comparable to the New York April figures, because the epidemic has gone on long enough that there is much more backdating now (so current counts may be somewhat inflated); but on its face it translates into a death rate of about 10% of NY's peak days.

3/ Further, although deaths lag, the Sunbelt spike has now gone on long enough that the pig should be making its way through the python - that is, deaths typically occur 14-18 days after a positive test and 10-14 after hospitalizations. (In NY the gap was shorter, actually.)

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 22h

4/ In fact, after adjusting for that two week lag, Florida and Texas are reporting relatively low CASE fatality rates right now; multiplying actual v. reported cases by 10x (this is probably low but they have been testing heavily) puts the IFR right in the 0.2%-0.3% we'd expect.

19 142 602

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 22h

5/ If, as serology studies have suggested, the actual v. reported rate is more like 20x (i.e. for every positive test 20 people have had [illegible]), the infection

Here's ICU/vent use in SE Texas, and ICU use change in Arizona, where things are tightest, over the last 20 days. No matter how hard you try, you can't make this a catastrophe. Maybe it becomes one, or maybe it fades slowly, we will see, but for now the hospitals are managing.

I am going to follow up with data directly from Sweden but it appears deaths are plunging - not a shock, given the ICU trends. Recall, Sweden has no lockdown. Deaths per-capita have been far lower than the U.K., Italy, France, or Spain, just higher than other Nordic countries.

1/ So on Monday, @laurawags of @vice asked me for an interview, and I agreed, under certain very specifuc conditions. Let's see what happened next. Note: Laura and I have never spoken by phone - this email thread is the entirety of our communication:

Laura Wagner

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has biffed coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

Alex Berenson

I'm very short on time. If you want to ask questions over email I will try to answer them, but only on the condition you don't do it Chatter-style and annotate or second-guess me after I have answered (in other words, it would have to be the equivalent of a live on-air interview). You ask, I answer, that's the end of it

He is not a social butterfly, but he does enjoy time with school friends. He needs structure and predictability and that is clearly not happening now. I try to keep a certain structure to our days, but it's hard because I am working, my husband is working and his older brother has lots of schoolwork he also needs help with. The other thing Colin is struggling with is not understanding why he has to do schoolwork when he's not in school.. there have been many meltdowns and I expect many more before all is said and done.

Why can't the US media and (blue-state) policymakers keep two ideas in mind at once? #SARSCoV2 can be dangerous, especially to the elderly - but to respond by denying kids an education (and generally wrecking the economy and society with lockdowns of dubious value) is a mistake.

Remember - it is only April 21. In most states, schools have been out for only about a month. Closing through the end of the school year means another TWO months of lost schooling, and a five-plus-month break overall...

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 22 apr.

And there's a lot of evidence that many kids regress during the normal summer break - and that poor kids especially suffer, because their parent(s) may not have the time or resources to help them.

1984 and Animal Farm get the attention, but Homage to Catalonia - Orwell's non-fiction on the Spanish Civil War - might be his best.

Wow, did he hate reporters:

3/ I guess one might say that the groupthink and lies Orwell saw in Spain informed his writing in 1984 - which was published in 1949, 11 years after Homage to Catalonia.

Apropos of nothing, of course.

Media reasonably consider 20M unemployed Americans as their main contribution to DNC 2020 campaign.

Accordingly, the current goal of C19 hysteria is to keep unemployment growing.

PS. As a bonus the same hysteria also make it easy to falsify elections results by Vote-by-Mail

This is important because it is all part of the Dem/liberal playbook. The fact that the media has become nothing more than gossip rags and reality tv at its worst is horrifying. And many are believing it hook, line and sinker.

As you watch this video, remember two points:

1) What we accept as normal ratchets over time if we don't explicitly fight it.

2) When police officers try and fail to exercise authority, they're humiliated; humiliation is dangerous for work that depends on public compliance.

Add those two ideas up and find the future. Next month they don't walk away. They give her a ticket. The month after that they don't give her a ticket, they arrest her. The month after that they don't arrest her, they take her child.

The longer this goes, the worse it will be.

HUGE findings from Iran - a true random antibody sample of households finds that 21-33% of people have been infected and the true infection fatality rate is roughly 1 in 1,000 - among the lowest figures yet published.

Even if the death rate has been underreported by a factor of 2 (which seems unlikely), this is maybe the strongest evidence yet that governments should end ALL lockdowns immediately.

2/ Peaks occur in May or June; and the strategy is assumed to run for at LEAST three months. I don't know what to say to anyone who does not see this forecast as very different than what Professor Ferguson said yesterday...

3/ Now, the Imperial College team did offer one scenario which it speculated might enable beds not to be overwhelmed in the short term - a heavy "suppression" strategy lasting a minimum of FIVE months, through September at a minimum...

EXACTLY.
That is why we are being told not to leave our houses! To suppress the virus!!

Now when we stop suppressing, obviously the virus will come back.

The Imperial report is quite pessimistic about that scenario because it doesn't attempt to model strategies taken in Asia

2/ In fact, the report says explicitly that "the initial duration of measures... will be several months."

is therefore population-wide social distancing combined with home isolation of cases and school and university closure.

To avoid a rebound in transmission, these policies will need to be maintained until large stocks of vaccine are available to immunise the population – which could be 18 months or more. Adaptive hospital surveillance-based triggers for switching on and off population-wide social distancing and school closure offer greater robustness to uncertainty than fixed duration interventions and can be adapted for regional use (e.g. at the state level in the US). Given local epidemics are not perfectly synchronised, local policies are also more efficient and can achieve comparable levels of suppression to national policies while being in force for a slightly smaller proportion of the time. However, we estimate that for a national GB policy, social distancing would need to be in force for at least 2/3 of the time (for $R_0$=2.4, see Table 4) until a vaccine was available.

However, there are very large uncertainties around the transmission of this virus, the likely effectiveness of different policies and the extent to which the population spontaneously adopts risk reducing behaviours. This means it is difficult to be definitive about the likely initial duration of measures which will be required, except that it will be several months. Future decisions on when and for how long to relax policies will need to be informed by ongoing surveillance.

The measures used to achieve suppression might also evolve over time. As case numbers fall, it becomes more feasible to adopt intensive testing, contact tracing and quarantine measures akin to

1/ I try to analyze dispassionately. But I will admit I am ANGRY about the way we have largely ignored the massive harm lockdowns and school closings have on kids. Remember: anyone under 30 is at almost ZERO risk here (there are always outliers; planes crash but flying is safe).

4/ Of all the choices we've made, sacrificing the mental health of children at zero risk from this illness is the LEAST acceptable. But so many in the media are young and don't have children, or perhaps are married couples with one child (an equation that makes care easier).

1/ One last point on the [illegible] model: It now predicts about 15,600 New York state deaths. About the only thing the model has gotten right is short term death counts; that figure seems at least marginally plausible...

2/ But that implies that the rest of the US will have about 65,000 - 4x+ NYS. Right now, the rest of the country is at about 1.4x NYS - and the epidemic does not seem to be accelerating elsewhere...

3/ And we have seen for the last 3 months that, for whatever reason, regional (or national) disparities don't lessen much once they're in place. If the rest of the US remains at that 1.4x level, deaths ex NY would be about 23,000, and the US total would be a bit under 40,000.

@AlexBerenson

1/ I'm going to try to explain this once more for all the blue-checks insisting that they KNOW lockdowns work.

The models failed. In real time. Even in NY state, the April 1 iteration of @IHME_UW model estimated four times the hospitalizations last week as were taking place.

08:54 AM - 10 □□□□□□, 2020

1,111 □□□□□□□□□□ 2,776 □□□□□

104 1.1K 2.8K

Alex Berenson ✓ @AlexBerenson · 10 □□□□□□

2/ But it's crucial to understand WHY they failed.

There is a TIME LAG between infection, symptoms, hospitalization, ICU care, and death. 5 days on average from infection to symptoms, several more days to hospitalization, 2-3 more to ICU care. These are averages, but correct.

9 152 556

Alex Berenson ✓ @AlexBerenson · 10 □□□□□□

3/ The models assumed (not unreasonably) that in places like New York, lockdowns had come TOO LATE. Between March 17 and March 25, hospitalizations in NY rose 7X. The models assumed that because of the time lag, the rise would go on UNTIL THE EFFECTS OF THE LOCKDOWN KICKED IN...

I am going to follow up with data directly from Sweden but it appears deaths are plunging - not a shock, given the ICU trends. Recall, Sweden has no lockdown. Deaths per-capita have been far lower than the U.K., Italy, France, or Spain, just higher than other Nordic countries.

Serious question and I hope you respond with seriousness too.

COVID-19 has killed more Americans in 6 weeks than the flu does in a year.

And that is WITH all the stark measures we've taken.

"Flu +" seems like an understatement, no?

Can you say more about what you mean?

1/ So on Monday, @laurawags of @vice asked me for an interview, and I agreed, under certain very specifuc conditions. Let's see what happened next. Note: Laura and I have never spoken by phone - this email thread is the entirety of our communication:
Laura Wagner
Hi Alex,
I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has biffed coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.
Is this something you'd be interested in?
Alex Berenson
I'm very short on time. If you want to ask questions over email I will try to answer them, but only on the condition you don't do it Chatbler-style and annotate or second-guess me after I have answered (in other words, it would have to be the equivalent of a live on-air interview). You ask, I answer, that's the end of it

2/ Of note, the paper assumes a reproduction cycle of 4 days. Thus the epidemic can spread fast - and will be hugely sensitive to changes in R (how many people 1 infected person infects in turn). At an R of 3.1 with a cycle of 4 days, 1 infection will become 10,000 in a month!

1/ A research paper from Vo (an Italian town that locked down early and tested almost all residents) is out. Of note: NOT ONE CHILD UNDER 10 (OUT OF 234) EVEN TESTED POSITIVE FOR THE VIRUS. (One teenager did.) Remind me why we've closed schools?

2/ Of note, the first known arrival of #COVID19 in the US has been dated to Jan. 15 in Seattle, and until now the first known death also occurred in Seattle - on Feb. 29 - more than three weeks after this death, on Feb. 6.

3/ So this is yet more evidence #SARSCoV2 has been present for longer and spread wider in the US than previously understood (because the replication cycle is so short and the transmission rate so high, even two weeks could make a 5-15x difference in the number of infections).

3/ Children with autism have had their routines disrupted and are having a difficult time adapting.

My name is  and I am an Intervention Specialist (teach special ed).  My own son is on the Autism spectrum, on the high functioning end.  He has been struggling since this whole lockdown started.  He is not a social butterfly, but he does enjoy time with school friends.  He needs structure and predictability and that is clearly not happening now.  I try to keep a certain structure to our days, but it's hard because I am working, my husband is working and his older brother has lots of schoolwork he also needs help with.  The other thing Colin is struggling with is not understanding why he has to do schoolwork when he's not in school.  There have been many meltdowns and I expect many more before all is said and done.

I've never like social media for children because I think it keeps them from face to face interactions which are critical for their growing minds.  However, due to the closure, they

I have a senior daughter in high school and a son who has autism and is in his first year of tech school. Both are having issues with extremely high anxiety and now I'm seeing depression.

Their social and emotional needs are taking a serious hit. My son's special needs friends are not receiving needed therapies and are having regressions due to the isolation as well.

My daughter's senior year is a wash, but she's still expected to take an AP exam next month. The digital learning is a joke - the platforms crash every day.

They both are working still - my son at a grocery store and daughter at a fast food restaurant. I'm grateful for that - it's their only normalcy.

Why can't the US media and (blue-state) policymakers keep two ideas in mind at once? #SARSCoV2 can be dangerous, especially to the elderly - but to respond by denying kids an education (and generally wrecking the economy and society with lockdowns of dubious value) is a mistake.

Remember - it is only April 21. In most states, schools have been out for only about a month. Closing through the end of the school year means another TWO months of lost schooling, and a five-plus-month break overall...

And there's a lot of evidence that many kids regress during the normal summer break - and that poor kids especially suffer, because their parent(s) may not have the time or resources to help them.

Gov. Tim Walz faces a key decision this week about whether to lift a stay-at-home order for a COVID-19 pandemic that is proving most deadly for long-term care residents, gumming up food production and spreading at a rate that nobody yet comprehends.

The death toll from COVID-19 reached 286 in Minnesota on Monday, but 223 involved long-term care facilities residents — who remain at greatest risk from the coronavirus infection due to age and existing last posting for my state said peak resource use would be April 9, now says it WAS March 23.

First "social distancing" and school closure started March 18, restaurants, etc., closed March 25.

So we peaked BEFORE the significant closures even began?

1/ #COVID—19 is devastating hospitals and employees nationally. But not for the reason you think. They are empty - prepared for a surge that has not come - and burning cash. An executive reports his group's stronger hospitals have "months" of cash; the weaker ones have "weeks."

about 15 other CFOs

- Seeing decline in volume about 40% and similar revenue cut – his low was about 50% cut in volume but only about 2-5% COVID
- Outpatient basically is a zero
- Only exception is hot spots which have a lot of volume but much lower revenue and higher cost because of PPE
- A reasonable way to think about it is down 40-60% at the peak
- No one expects to recapture everything they lost
- Staff
  - Not flexing yet
  - Post spike in likely have to make some adjustments
  - Could take 40% off of earnings and need to reduce staffing by 10% but not close to enough
- Longer term impact

3/ The stress even on healthy families is incredible. And for children in troubled families, the cost is far higher; for those kids, schools may well be the only chance they have to be seen every day by an adult who is not high or abusive.

4/ Of all the choices we've made, sacrificing the mental health of children at zero risk from this illness is the LEAST acceptable. But so many in the media are young and don't have children, or perhaps are married couples with one child (an equation that makes care easier).

I am going to follow up with data directly from Sweden but it appears deaths are plunging - not a shock, given the ICU trends. Recall, Sweden has no lockdown. Deaths per-capita have been far lower than the U.K., Italy, France, or Spain, just higher than other Nordic countries.

COVID-19 has killed more Americans in 6 weeks than the flu does in a year.

And that is WITH all the stark measures we've taken.

1/ So on Monday, @laurawags of @vice asked me for an interview, and I agreed, under certain very specifuc conditions. Let's see what happened next. Note: Laura and I have never spoken by phone - this email thread is the entirety of our communication:

Laura Wagner

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has biffed coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

Alex Berenson

I'm very short on time. If you want to ask questions over email I will try to answer them, but only on the condition you don't do it Chatter-style and annotate or second-guess me after I have answered (in other words, it would have to be the equivalent of a live on-air interview). You ask, I answer, that's the end of it

Hi Alex,

I have 3 children, 2 of whom are special needs.

My son is 4 with autism. His aba therapy ceased coming to our which is 6 hours per day,I, 5 days per week. Without intensive aba he is restless and hyper focused on one interest for days on end.

My daughter is 2 with cerebral palsy. Her physical therapy has ceased and the progress she was making toward walking has stalled completely.

We work with them the best we know throughout the day but we arent trained and we also have jobs.

Thanks

As you watch this video, remember two points:

1) What we accept as normal ratchets over time if we don't explicitly fight it.

2) When police officers try and fail to exercise authority, they're humiliated; humiliation is dangerous for work that depends on public compliance.

Add those two ideas up and find the future. Next month they don't walk away. They give her a ticket. The month after that they don't give her a ticket, they arrest her. The month after that they don't arrest her, they take her child.

The longer this goes, the worse it will be.

Hadn't realized how much Team Apocalypse HATES the fact that Disney World has reopened. (Which is fine, of course; it's a huge mostly outdoor space and @disney can control capacity however it likes.) But any move towards normality just maddens the doomsayers, doesn't it?

Yeah relating this to influenza in any manner is disreputable and gross. Only conspiracy theorists like the CDC compare it that way:

approximately 4.6 times that of non-Hispanic White persons.

- Cumulative hospitalization rates for COVID-19 in adults (18-64 years) at this time are higher than cumulative end-of-season hospitalization rates for influenza over each of the past 5 influenza seasons.
- For people 65 years and older, current cumulative COVID-19 hospitalization rates at this time are higher than cumulative end-of season hospitalization rates for influenza for 4 of the 5 past influenza seasons; lower only than rates observed during the 2017-18 season
- For children (0-17 years), cumulative COVID-19 hospitalization rates are much lower than cumulative influenza hospitalization rates at comparable time points* during recent influenza seasons.

So we peaked BEFORE the significant closures even began?

Btw - I have not started looking at the state figures yet to see if they have made the model congruent with (past/current) reality in this revision - does anyone know?

Great news. @IHME_UW updated its model again - two days after the last revision. Total deaths fell from 81K to under 61K hospitalizations fell from 140K to 90K (1/3 last week's projection) m. The peak is now projected in 3 days. Can we PLEASE talk about reopening the nation?

1/ #COVID-19 is devastating hospitals and employees nationally. But not for the reason you think. They are empty - prepared for a surge that has not come - and burning cash. An executive reports his group's stronger hospitals have "months" of cash; the weaker ones have "weeks."

about 15 other CFOs

- Seeing decline in volume about 40% and similar revenue cut – his low was about 50% cut in volume but only about 2-5% COVID
- Outpatient basically is a zero
- Only exception is hot spots which have a lot of volume but much lower revenue and higher cost because of PPE
- A reasonable way to think about it is down 40-60% at the peak
- No one expects to recapture everything they lost
- Staff
  - Not flexing yet
  - Post spike in likely have to make some adjustments
  - Could take 40% off of earnings and need to reduce staffing by 10% but not close to enough
- Longer term impact

Time to start using more straightforward language and calling out people who don't tell the truth, like @pbump. The original model explicitly accounted for the effect of lockdowns. It was wrong in real-time, embarrassingly so; that's why it's been updated. (It's still wrong.)

Philip Bump @pbump
A notable shift downward in projected deaths from coronavirus is already being spun as "experts were wrong!!" Instead of "hey, the thing experts said would drive down deaths might be driving down deaths."

1/ I try to analyze dispassionately. But I will admit I am ANGRY about the way we have largely ignored the massive harm lockdowns and school closings have on kids. Remember: anyone under 30 is at almost ZERO risk here (there are always outliers; planes crash but flying is safe).

2/ Children, more than anyone else, suffer immediately from the lockdowns. They're denied school. They're denied normal socializing with their friends. In many places they have even - bizarrely - been denied the chance to play outside.

3/ The stress even on healthy families is incredible. And for children in troubled families, the cost is far higher; for those kids, schools may well be the only chance they have to be seen every day by an adult who is not high or abusive.

4/ Of all the choices we've made, sacrificing the mental health of children at zero risk from this illness is the LEAST acceptable. But so many in the media are young and don't have children, or perhaps are married couples with one child (an equation that makes care easier).

1/ I'm going to try to explain this once more for all the blue-checks insisting that they KNOW lockdowns work.

The models failed. In real time. Even in NY state, the April 1 iteration of @IHME_UW model estimated four times the hospitalizations last week as were taking place.

2/ But it's crucial to understand WHY they failed.

There is a TIME LAG between infection, symptoms, hospitalization, ICU care, and death. 5 days on average from infection to symptoms, several more days to hospitalization, 2-3 more to ICU care. These are averages, but correct.
